VOLUME XLVII, PART I.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 4, 1911.

The first session of the Sixty-second Congress commenced this day at the Capitol, in the city of Washington, in pursuance of the proclamation of the President of the United States of the 4th day of March, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT (JAMES S. SHERMAN, of New York) took the chair and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, upon the opening of this Congress we humbly confess our dependence upon Thee and earnestly implore Thy help in the labors to which Thou hast called us. We are not sufficient unto ourselves and, unaided by Thee, are utterly unable to bear the burdens of this Thy people. Wherefore we beseech Thee to help us by Thy spirit. The way before us we know not; yet full well do we know that, if we humbly submit ourselves to Thee, Thou wilt direct our steps. Even so, Father, guide and direct us.

For the President of the United States and for all who are in authority we pray. Endue them with wisdom from above, enrich them with Thy spirit, and uphold them by Thy strength, that as they rule by Thy favor, so also they may serve in Thy fear.

Bless, we pray Thee, this Thy people, upon whom Thy favor has rested. Deliver us from strife within and from warfare without. Grant us to dwell in peace and in unity. Teach us, we pray Thee, to love Thy law and incline our hearts to do Thy will.

So, our Father, may this Congress, begun in Thy name, be continued in Thy fear and ended to Thy glory. And unto the name which is above every name will we ascribe praise now and for evermore. Amen.

THE PROCLAMATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proclamation of the President of the United States convening Congress in extraordinary session.

The Secretary (Charles G. Bennett) read the proclamation, as follows:

Whereas by the special message dated January 26, 1911, there was transmitted to the Senate and the House of Representatives an agreement between the Department of State and the Canadian Government in regard to reciprocal tariff legislation, together with an earnest recommendation that the necessary legislation be promptly adopted; and

Whereas a bill to carry into effect said agreement has passed the House of Representatives, but has failed to reach a vote in the Senate; and

Whereas the agreement stipulates not only that "the President of the United States will communicate to Congress the conclusions now reached and recommend the adoption of such legislation as may be necessary on the part of the United States to give effect to the proposed arrangement," but also that "the Governments of the two countries will use their utmost efforts to bring about such changes by concurrent legislation at Washington and at Ottawa":

Now, therefore, I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the power vested in me by the Constitution, do hereby proclaim and declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the convening of both Houses of the Congress of the United States at their respective Chambers in the city of Washington on the 4th day of April, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon, to the end that they may consider and determine whether the Congress shall, by the necessary legislation, make operative the agreement.

All persons entitled to act as Members of the Sixty-second Congress are required to take notice of this proclamation.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States at Washington the 4th day of March, A. D. 1911, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

[SEAL.] WM. H. TAFT.

By the President:

P. C. KNOX, Secretary of State.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. ROOT presented the credentials of JAMES A. O'GORMAN, chosen by the Legislature of the State of New York a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1911, which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. DIXON. I present the credentials of the Senator elect from the State of Montana, Hon. HENRY L. MYERS, who is present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The credentials of HENRY L. MYERS, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Montana a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1911, were read and ordered to be filed.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ascertains by an examination of the RECORD that there has not been uniformity of procedure at the opening of a Congress. Sometimes a call of the roll has preceded the swearing in of Senators elect; at other times a call of the roll has been omitted altogether. It seems to the Chair that the better practice would be first to call the names of the Senators elect and have them take the constitutional oath of office before the roll of the Senate is called. Unless the Senate desires some other procedure taken, that will be the course followed this morning.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in view of the statement by the Chair that the particular method of procedure has been one of uncertain observance heretofore, and in view of what I consider to be important that it should be a fixed rule, I simply rise to say that I do not recall that in any time other than the one I am about to mention the matter was ever challenged in the Senate and considered by the Senate as to what was the proper method of procedure. I think it was two years ago that the question arose and was discussed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Four.

Mr. BACON. Four years ago. That is only an evidence of the way in which time passes rapidly as the years grow upon us. I thought it was two years ago. The matter was then discussed, and after discussion it was determined in the way the Chair has now suggested as the proper way, and in that conclusion I very cordially agree. I only rose for the purpose of saying that I think it should not pass simply with a statement that it has been a procedure in which one method has been followed at one time and another at another time, and I would like, by the emphasis now given to it, to have it recognized that the Senate, upon due consideration, determined that it is the proper method that the Senators elect who are present should be sworn in before the roll is called.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I would dislike to see that become the settled rule of the Senate, for the reason that it might transpire that some Senator elect would have some question raised about the form of his credentials or about his right to take the oath of office, and if that should come to pass then obviously the Senate must proceed otherwise.

It seems to me that the first thing to do is to ascertain the presence of a quorum so that the Senate may be in a condition to proceed to any business; and after the presence of a quorum has been ascertained, then proceed to the business of administering the oath to Senators elect.

I was not going to say "yea" or "nay," except that I believe the orderly and proper way is first to ascertain that the Senate is in a condition to proceed to business. Obviously, if there were not a quorum of the Senators present, a Senator elect could not take the oath if that question were raised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair's thought was that this time is the same as at the daily convening of the Senate, and that in the absence of a question being raised it would be assumed that a quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Then it would be unnecessary to call the roll after the Senators elect were sworn.

Mr. BACON. I want to make this suggestion: That the very case suggested by the Senator from Texas proves to my mind conclusively the necessity of the method of procedure now proposed to be adopted.

Suppose, Mr. President, it should be so that less than a quorum of Senators who had already been sworn in were present and that there were enough Senators duly elected present who when sworn in would make a quorum; would it be contended for a moment that such Senators could not be sworn in and that the body could then proceed to the transaction of business?

Mr. President, it might happen in some very great misfortune that a majority of the Senators, or rather a majority of the Senate, had not been sworn in. There might be not only a complete political revolution which would bring to us 30 or 31 new Senators, as the case might be, but there might be a disaster in which 12 or 15 others had been killed; would it be said that the wheels of legislation should be forever blocked? There would be a case where it would be an impossibility for a quorum of Senators sworn in to assemble, because it would not be in existence; and yet there might be 30 Senators present duly qualified and duly elected and competent when sworn in to proceed with business.

It seems to me it rests upon the fundamental principle that less than a quorum can always do that which is necessary to obtain a quorum, and that is the only office of a minority—to secure the presence of a quorum.

It might be so, I repeat, that there was no quorum present of those who had already been sworn in; yet there might be 31 Senators sitting here with their credentials already on file, if you please, with their names on the pay roll, and, according to the contention of my learned friend from Texas, the Senate would be powerless to swear them in and proceed with the transaction of business.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the argument of a calamity is not persuasive, because that might happen to all of the Senators as to a part of them, and it might happen to the House of Representatives as well as to the Senate. If some great pestilence or other misfortune should strike down more than one-half of the House of Representatives, it would be disabled, although they would have been elected and they are on the roll.

I am not so sure about our practice; but I think that a Senator does not draw a salary, as I understood the Senator from Georgia to say, before he takes the oath of office.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; undoubtedly. I would not be surprised if the Senator would examine that he would find he had done the same thing.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I was sworn in the day my term began. Consequently I was not put to the necessity of making that inquiry. I would doubtless have done it had it been otherwise. I want to say that I think it better that there should be a rule, even if it is not the best rule, and make no contest over it.

Mr. BACON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to one thing. I have noticed that in the many very valuable acquisitions which we secure from the House, which we are always very glad to have, and by which the membership of the Senate is greatly enriched, and one of them is my distinguished friend from Texas, they are very apt to bring with them to the Senate some of the traditions, and prejudices, and methods, and habits, and customs of the House. I want to call the attention of my distinguished friend to the fact that so far from his having been loyal to the traditions of the House, in which he was once so great an ornament, he has absolutely forgotten the fact that the House before swearing in anyone, and when there is not a single Member who is competent to constitute a quorum, elect and swear in a Speaker.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true because of the necessities of the case. The body is not a continuing body like the Senate. I was going to say that whether that be the practice or not, I am absolutely certain it is a bad practice for any man to vote as a member of a body until he has taken the oath and become a member of it. Again, and of course I yield to the Senator from Georgia in knowledge of that, but I have always been surprised that the Members elect a Speaker before they take the oath of office. The law provides for the way they shall take the oath from the Clerk.

But I have seen this, Mr. President. I have seen a Member of that House with the certificate of a sovereign State certifying to his right to a seat there stood aside and denied his right to take the oath of office.

It seems to me that all questions of that kind ought to be decided before the organization is complete, and that such questions can only be decided when it is ascertained that the body is in a condition to proceed.

But I repeat, I think it is better that the Senate should have a rule even though it should not be the best one.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate further than to suggest that the custom of swearing in a Speaker before the Members themselves have taken the oath does not grow out of any necessity. The law provides that the roll of the Members shall be called by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. It is perfectly competent for them to be then sworn in and afterwards proceed to the election of the Speaker, and yet it is a fact that in the House they elect a Speaker before the Members are sworn in.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO SENATORS ELECT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Secretary will call, in groups of four, the roll of Senators elect, and as their names are called the Senators, if there be no objection, will present themselves to take the constitutional oath of office. The Secretary has the roll made up alphabetically. If there be no objection to the procedure the names of Senators-elect will be called alphabetically rather than by States.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. BRYAN, Mr. CHILTON, Mr. CLAPP, and Mr. CLARK of Wyoming.

These Senators were escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. WATSON, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. WARREN, respectively, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. DU PONT, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. JOHNSON of Maine.

These Senators were escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. BAILEY, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. FRYE, respectively, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. KERN, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. LEA, and Mr. LIPPITT.

These Senators were escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. STEPHENSON, Mr. TAYLOR, and Mr. WETMORE, respectively, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. LODGE, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. MCLEAN, and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey.

These Senators were escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. CRANE, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. BRANDEGEE, and Mr. BRIGGS, respectively, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. MYERS, Mr. NIXON, Mr. O'GORMAN, and Mr. OLIVER.

These Senators were escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. DIXON, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. ROOT, and Mr. PENROSE, respectively, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. PAGE, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. RAYNER, and Mr. REED.

These Senators (with the exception of Mr. POINDEXTER, who was absent) were escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. BURTON, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, and Mr. STONE, respectively, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. WORKS.

These Senators were escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. SMOOT, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, and Mr. PERKINS, respectively, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Clapp	Foster	Lea
Bailey	Clark, Wyo.	Frye	Lippitt
Borah	Clarke, Ark.	Gallinger	Lodge

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 1), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 2), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. BACON.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 4), which was considered by unanimous consent:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "two."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, it seems to me the amendment ought not to be adopted without some consideration, and I would ask the Senator from Texas to withhold his proposition until to-morrow. This is a matter which has been discussed some, but never at length, by the Senate. I think the Senator from Texas ought to let the resolution take the usual course and be adopted without amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. It is absolutely certain that for a month or more the Senate will not average a daily session of 60 minutes, and, therefore, if we come here at 2 o'clock, we will adjourn before 5 o'clock, and in almost every instance before 4 o'clock. The only result of coming at 12 o'clock will be to interrupt our committee meetings, if we are to have any, and to interrupt our morning work, and, if we hold a session of two hours, beginning at 12 o'clock, a majority of the Senate will spend the better part of those two hours in the lunch room.

Whatever may be the necessity later in the session for longer hours of work in the Senate, it is absolutely certain that for the first 60 days of every session three-fourths of the time must be applied to work in the committee room. Yet under the rule which we have pursued we meet in our committee rooms at 10 o'clock and must adjourn at 12 o'clock to come here. We meet here and in two hours we adjourn, thus interrupting our work in the committee without accomplishing any good results here.

If the Senator from Nebraska will take the trouble to examine the record of Congress, he will find that at every session for more than 60 days it seldom happens that we are in daily session beyond 2 hours. Just exactly why we should want to leave our committee work, or leave our work in our individual rooms, and come here to spend an hour, thus breaking the day, and then return to our rooms—because we do not return to our committee rooms—is more than I can understand.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to suggest to the Senator from Texas that to-morrow we will receive the message, and it would probably be desirable for to-morrow, at least, that we should meet at 12 o'clock, and we can decide at that time whether we will make it a general rule to meet at 12 or at 2.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Massachusetts can perhaps advise us whether that message is to be of such length that we need an early session to hear it.

Mr. LODGE. I am not advised as to the probable length of the message. The reason I made the suggestion was that I supposed the time of release of the message has been given to the press throughout the country for a certain hour, and I think it would be more convenient to the press and to the public if the old hour might be maintained to-morrow. We could allow this resolution to go over, and the Senator from Nebraska could move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at noon to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY. It is immaterial to the press and to the country whether they obtain the message from the House or from the Senate. It will be read in both bodies, and I assume that the House will meet at 12 o'clock, and therefore the newspapers would be subjected to no embarrassment on that account.

But, Mr. President, I simply wanted to call attention to this matter. I recognize that until there are some other amendments to the rules it would not be practicable, without a certain degree of confusion, to change the hour of meeting. I will therefore allow this to go, with the understanding that there will be no objection to taking up the matter and disposing of it within the next three or four days. The Committee on Rules has been charged with the duty of investigating and reporting on this question, and my part of that committee is ready to report, and I only want the matter determined. With that understanding I withdraw the amendment.

I wish it were possible, under the rules, to leave the amendment on the desk, so that we might dispose of it without delay. But, of course, the amendment can not be left there while the resolution is disposed of, and I simply give notice that after to-morrow I shall attempt to secure a change in the hour of daily meeting, proposing such other changes as will conform to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROPOSED LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. CURTIS. Pending that motion, I desire to give the following notice and to have it read and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine withhold his motion for that purpose?

Mr. FRYE. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine withholds his motion. The Senator from Kansas gives the following notice, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 3), as follows:

I hereby give notice that when the committees of the Senate are appointed I shall propose the following amendment to the standing rules of the Senate:

"Resolved, That Rule XIX of the standing rules for conducting business in the Senate of the United States be amended by adding the following proviso at the end of the first paragraph of said rule, to wit:

"Provided, That after any question has been considered upon 5 separate calendar days, or when any question has been debated for 10 consecutive hours, it shall be in order for any Senator to rise to a question of privilege and move to close all debate and vote at a fixed time upon the pending question before the Senate after 3 hours' additional consideration. Said motion shall be submitted to the Senate and shall be determined by a yea-and-nay vote. If two-thirds of the Senators present vote in favor of the motion, it shall be declared carried, debate shall close, and a vote taken upon the question as provided in the motion. If less than two-thirds vote for the motion, the same shall be declared lost."

RECESS.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m., when it reassembled.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cullom	Lea	Rayner
Bailey	Cummins	Lippitt	Richardson
Borah	Curtis	Lodge	Root
Bourne	Dillingham	Lorimer	Shively
Bradley	Dixon	McCumber	Simmons
Brandegee	du Pont	McLean	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Brown	Frye	Myers	Stephenson
Bryan	Gallinger	Nelson	Sutherland
Burnham	Gamble	Newlands	Swanson
Burton	Gronna	Nixon	Taylor
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	O'Gorman	Thornton
Chilton	Heyburn	Oliver	Warren
Clapp	Hitchcock	Overman	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Page	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Williams
Crane	Jones	Penrose	Works
Crawford	Kern	Perkins	Young
Culberson	La Follette	Pomerene

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. TERRELL] on account of personal illness. I will not repeat the announcement. It will not be necessary for me to do so. I will simply add that the condition of my colleague's health is such that I hope he will be with us before the expiration of many days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

William J. Browning, Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled and that CHAMP CLARK, a Representative from the State of Missouri, has been elected Speaker; that South Trimble, a citizen of the State of Kentucky, has been elected Clerk; and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Also, that a committee of three members has been appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join a committee of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States, and to inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make, and that Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. BARTLETT, and Mr. MANN have been appointed members of the committee on the part of the House.

RELATIONS WITH JAPAN AND MEXICO.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I will address the Senate at its convenience upon our relations with Japan and Mexico and the Monroe doctrine as distinguished from the Roosevelt doctrine in connection therewith.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 5, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 4, 1911.

This being the day fixed in the proclamation of the President for the assembling of the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, the House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. Alexander McDowell, Clerk of the last House.

The Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-first Congress, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, above all, through all, and in us all, from whom cometh all wisdom, power, and goodness. Open Thou our spiritual eyes, quicken our susceptibilities, and make us conscious of Thy presence. The past is ours by inheritance, the future depends upon our use of the present opportunities; make us therefore wise and strong and pure in our generation, that we may move forward to the larger possibilities which wait on the faithful. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

Increase, we beseech Thee, our faith and confidence in that overruling Providence which hitherto has shaped and guided the destiny of our Republic, that each citizen throughout the length and breadth of the land may vie with each in a faithful and patriotic service to his country, and grant, O God our Father, that the coordinate branches of our Government may work in harmony together with Thee; that the sacred rights of the people, civil, political, and religious, may be safeguarded and every legitimate interest advanced till the desert places shall blossom as the rose and peace, prosperity, and happiness fill every home; that the genius of our Republic may find its full fruition in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, who taught us to pray:

"Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen."

PROCLAMATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Clerk read the following:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas by the special message dated January 26, 1911, there was transmitted to the Senate and the House of Representatives an agreement between the Department of State and the Canadian Government in regard to reciprocal tariff legislation, together with an earnest recommendation that the necessary legislation be promptly adopted; and

Whereas a bill to carry into effect said agreement has passed the House of Representatives, but has failed to reach a vote in the Senate; and

Whereas the agreement stipulates not only that "the President of the United States will communicate to Congress the conclusions now reached and recommend the adoption of such legislation as may be necessary on the part of the United States to give effect to the proposed arrangement," but also that "the Governments of the two countries will use their utmost efforts to bring about such changes by concurrent legislation at Washington and at Ottawa";

Now, therefore, I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the power vested in me by the Constitution, do hereby proclaim and declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the convening of both Houses of the Congress of the United States at their respective Chambers, in the city of Washington, on the 4th of April, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon, to the end that they may consider and determine whether the Congress shall, by the necessary legislation, make operative the agreement.

All persons entitled to act as Members of the Sixty-second Congress are required to take notice of this proclamation.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States at Washington the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eleven and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

[SEAL.] WM. H. TAFT.

By the President:

P. C. KNOX, Secretary of State.

RETIRING ADDRESS OF THE CLERK.

The CLERK. Now that the hour of my departure is at hand, I take the opportunity of expressing my sincere and heartfelt thanks to the Members of the past eight Congresses for their uniform kindness and courtesy to me. [Applause.]

During my eight terms as Clerk 87 Members of Congress have died while in office, and they are silently and patiently waiting beyond the river for the supreme committee on committees to properly place them.

For the Members of the last eight Congresses, living and dead, I have the most profound respect and veneration, and in passing the graves of the dead would in all sincerity drop a tear and a sprig of myrtle upon their last resting places.

And the living, wherever and whenever I meet them, will receive a cordial greeting and a glad hand.

To the Members of the Sixty-second Congress, now assembling, for what they are about to do to me I thank them in advance and wish them well. [Applause and laughter.]

Three hundred and eighty-eight Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Clerk presents for the information of the House a statement showing the changes that have occurred since the regular election of Members of the Sixty-second Congress.

The statement is as follows:

Districts.	Names.	Date of vacancy.
Second Pennsylvania	Joel Cook [1]	Dec. 15, 1910
Ninth Iowa	Walter I. Smith [2]	Mar. 15, 1911

[1] Died. [2] Resigned.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The CLERK. The next business is the nomination and election of a Speaker.

Mr. BURLESON. The will of the Members elect of the Sixty-second Congress who are Democrats, as unanimously declared in caucus action, favors the selection of Hon. CHAMP CLARK, a Member elect from the State of Missouri, for the position of Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to place in nomination the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] for that office. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the unanimous vote of the Republican caucus to nominate for the office of Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Sixty-second Congress Hon. JAMES R. MANN, a Member elect from the State of Illinois. [Applause.]

The CLERK. Are there any other nominations? If not, the nominations are closed. I have selected as tellers the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER], and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE], who will please take their places at the desk.

The tellers having taken their places, the House proceeded to vote viva voce for Speaker.

The following is the vote in detail:

VOTED PRESENT—1.

Berger

The CLERK. The total number of votes cast is 368. GEORGE W. NORRIS of Nebraska has received 1 vote, HENRY A. COOPER of Wisconsin 10, JAMES R. MANN of Illinois 131, and CHAMP CLARK of Missouri 220. [Applause.] CHAMP CLARK having received a majority of votes, is duly elected Speaker. [Applause.] The following committee will wait upon the Speaker elect and escort him to the chair: Mr. MANN of Illinois, Mr. UNDERWOOD of Alabama, and Mr. VREELAND of New York.

The committee appointed to conduct the Speaker elect to the chair having returned with him,

Mr. MANN said: It is a great office, filled by a great man. [Applause.] I present to you your Speaker, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK. [Long-continued applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE SPEAKER ELECT.

The SPEAKER ELECT. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, election to the high position of Speaker is an exceptional honor, for which you have my profoundest gratitude. To be a Member of the House, to represent 200,000 American citizens in the more numerous branch of the greatest legislative body on earth, is a distinction to which, in the nature of things, comparatively few men may attain. To be chosen by the Representatives of 92,000,000 people to preside over your deliberations is a signal mark of your favor, for which the best return is to discharge the onerous and important duties of the station to which you have assigned me with such impartiality, constancy, industry, courtesy, and good temper as to expedite the public business, thereby promoting the public weal.

The pleasure of being elected Speaker is much enhanced by the perfect unanimity with which it is conferred by my party fellows and the universal good will with which it is accepted by our colaborers of the minority. [Applause.]

Coming into the Speakership under these fortunate circumstances, the hearty cooperation of all Members of whatever political persuasion is hereby earnestly invoked in maintaining order and decorum and in placing upon the statute books laws for the good of the country and the whole country, working out promptly, patiently, courageously, wisely, and patriotically those measures necessary for the betterment of governmental methods and for the amelioration of the conditions under which we live. [Applause.]

My Democratic brethren, coupled with the joy of once more seeing a House a large majority of which is of my own political faith is a keen sense of our responsibility to our country and our kind. It is an old adage worthy of acceptation that where much is given much is required.

After 16 years of exclusion from power in the House and 14 years of exclusion from power in every department of government, we are restored to power in the House of Representatives and in that alone. We are this day put upon trial, and the duty devolves upon us to demonstrate, not so much by fine phrases as by good works, that we are worthy of the confidence imposed in us by the voters of the land, and that we are also worthy of their wider confidence. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We could not if we would, and we would not if we could, escape this severe test. We will not shirk our duty. We shrink not from the responsibility. That we will prove equal to the situation in which we find ourselves placed through our own efforts and by our own desires there can be no doubt, and the way to accomplish that is to fulfill with courage, intelligence, and patriotism the promises made before the election in order to win the election. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By discharging our duty thoroughly and well, subordinating personal desires to principle and personal ambition to an exalted love of country, we will not only receive the indorsement of the people, but, what is far better, we will deserve their indorsement.

Chief among these promises were:

1. An honest, intelligent revision of the tariff downward, in order to give every American citizen an equal chance in the race of life, and to pamper none by special favor or special privilege; to reduce the cost of living by eradicating the enormities and cruelties of the present tariff bill; and to raise the necessary revenue to support the Government. Bills are already far advanced in preparation looking to the accomplishment of these beneficent ends. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

2. The passage of a resolution submitting to the States for ratification a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by the popular vote. This resolution has already been introduced and will soon be passed by the House. Let us hope that we will send it to the Senate by the unanimous vote of the House, thereby giving to our action the maximum of force. [Applause.]

3. Such changes in the rules of the House as are necessary for the thorough and intelligent consideration of measures for the public good, several of which changes are accomplished facts; if other changes are deemed wise, they will be promptly made.

I congratulate the House and the country, and particularly do I congratulate the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, upon the success of the important and far-reaching experiment of selecting committees through the instrumentality of a committee, an experiment touching which dire predictions were made and concerning the operation of which grave doubts were entertained, even by some honest reformers.

4. "Economy in the public expense that labor may be lightly burdened." The literal fulfillment of that promise which so nearly affects the comfort and happiness of millions we have begun—and we began at the proper place—by cutting down the running expenses of the House by more than $188,000 per annum. Economy, like charity, should begin at home. That is where we began. We can not with straight faces and clear consciences reform expenses elsewhere unless we reform them here at the fountain head. The Democratic caucus deserves well of the country for taking this long and important step in the direction of economy all along the line.

The Constitution gives the House the practical control of the purse strings of the country, and the House should insist, resolutely and firmly, on exercising that control to the end that the appropriation bills may be reduced to the needs of the Government economically and effectively administered. It is our duty to provide every dollar needed for the proper and economical conduct of the Government, but it is equally our duty to prevent waste and extravagance in public expenditures, for we should never forget that it is a difficult task for millions of families to live now in decency and comfort. Surely it is the part of wisdom, statesmanship, humanitarianism, and patriotism to legislate so as to reduce their burdens to the minimum. The resuscitation of the Holman rule will help along in this matter. No good citizen desires to cripple the Government in any legitimate function, but no good citizen desires that the people be loaded down with unnecessary taxes.

5. The publication of campaign contributions and disbursements before the election. The bill to accomplish that desired reform has been prepared and introduced. It will be speedily passed by the House. The average citizen, whatever his politics, is absolutely honest. He demands honesty and cleanliness in politics; he believes that too much money is spent in election matters; and he proposes to put an end to it. As the Representatives of the average man it is our duty to carry out his patriotic wishes in that regard to the end that all men desirous of serving the public may have a fair chance in politics, and to the end that this puissant Republic, the political hope of the world, may not be destroyed by corruption in elections.

6. The admission of both Arizona and New Mexico as States. [Applause.] I violate no confidence in stating that so far as the House is concerned, they will be speedily admitted and they will be admitted together. [Applause.]

These are a few of the things which we promised. We are not only going to accomplish them, we have already begun the great task. What we have done is only an earnest of what we will do. We this day report progress to the American people. The rest will follow in due course.

No man is fit to be a lawgiver for a mighty people who yields to the demands and solicitations of the few having access to his ear but is forgetful of that vast multitude who may never hear his voice or look into his face. [Applause.]

I suggest to my fellow Members on both sides of the big aisle—which is the line of demarcation betwixt us as political partisans, but not as American citizens or American Representatives—that he serves his party best who serves his country best. [Applause.]

I am now ready to take the oath and ask that it be administered by Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland.

The oath of office was administered to the Speaker by Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS ELECT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll by States, and as Members' names are called they will come in front of the Clerk's desk and be sworn.

The roll was called, the Members presented themselves as their names were called by States, and took, respectively, the oath of office provided by law.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the names of those who desire to affirm instead of swear.

Mr. BUTLER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. GRIEST, of Pennsylvania; Mr. HEALD, of Delaware; and Mr. PALMER, of Pennsylvania, appeared and were affirmed.

SWEARING IN OF DELEGATES ELECT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the names of the Delegates, who will present themselves and be sworn.

The Delegates elect from the Territories presented themselves and took the oath of office.

CLERK AND OTHER OFFICERS.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and request that it be reported, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 5.

Resolved, That Hon. South Trimble, of the State of Kentucky, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That W. Stokes Jackson, of the State of Indiana, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives;

That Joseph J. Sinnott, of the State of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That William M. Dunbar, of the State of Georgia, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives; and

That Rev. Henry N. Couden, of the State of Michigan, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Alexander McDowell, of the State of Pennsylvania, be elected Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That Henry Casson, of the State of Wisconsin, be elected Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives;

That Frank P. Lyon, of the State of New York, be elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives; and

That Samuel A. Langum, of the State of Minnesota, be elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer that, not as a substitute but as an amendment; to strike out all the names in the resolution except that of Mr. Couden and offer this as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The vote will first be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the resolution, so that we may have a separate vote on the election of Chaplain.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the last clause of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Henry N. Couden, of the State of Michigan, be, and he is hereby, chosen chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SWEARING IN OF OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER. The officers elect of the House of Representatives will present themselves at the bar of the House.

The officers elect presented themselves at the bar of the House and the oath of office was administered to them by the Speaker.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CLAYTON. I offer and move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 1.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to inform the President of the United States that the House of Representatives has elected CHAMP CLARK, a Representative from the State of Missouri, Speaker, and South Trimble, a citizen of the State of Kentucky, Clerk, of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 2.

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, that CHAMP CLARK, a Representative from the State of Missouri, has been elected Speaker, that South Trimble, a citizen of the State of Kentucky, has been elected Clerk, and that the House is ready for business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 3.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Speaker, on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as such committee on the part of the House Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. BARTLETT, and Mr. MANN.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 4.

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Vice President had appointed as said committee Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. BACON.

SELECTION OF SEATS.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 6.

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to draw seats for Members and Delegates of the present Congress, and when names of Members absent from the city or on account of sickness are called that seats be selected by their colleagues, the drawing to be in the following manner:

The Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls, of marble or other material, equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate, whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball, shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

Before said drawing shall commence, each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished; and whenever the seats of Members or Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY] sent a message to me, requesting me, on account of his absence, to draw his seat for him when his number was called. I notice the resolution provides that the colleagues of Members who are absent shall draw for them. The question is whether under this resolution as drawn I would be authorized to comply with the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY].

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. That is an inquiry with respect to a question of fact. The Chair has no objection to the gentleman from Illinois doing it if the House has none.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Speaker, that I may be allowed to draw for the gentleman who made the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to be allowed to draw a seat for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY]. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say one word before the resolution is adopted, so that all may understand it. We have realized that there are not sufficient seats on this side of the aisle to accommodate all of the Democrats who have been elected, so that it is necessary for some of us to take seats on the other side of the aisle. Heretofore the practice, when this side was in the majority, was to select the row of seats next to the wall over there; so that our people would be compelled, under this arrangement, to take the tier of seats over there on that side, next to the wall.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think it may be understood that no Member on this side of the House will take a seat in the further tier of seats to the left of the Speaker, so that it will be left clear for Members on that side of the House.

The SPEAKER. All Members will understand, then, that that is the agreement. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to draw a seat for Mr. CARY, who is absent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois for unanimous consent to draw a seat for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY], who is absent? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, pending the drawing of the seats under the resolution, I ask unanimous consent that Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, ex-Speaker of this House; Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania; the Hon. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois, the minority leader selected at this session of Congress; and Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE, of New York, on the Republican side; and Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama; Hon. W. A. JONES, of Virginia; Hon. J. F. TALBOTT, of Maryland; and Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, of New York, on the Democratic side, be permitted to select seats where they see fit.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask leave to amend the request of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that, in accordance with the action taken in the last House on this same subject, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] assent to the additional proposal that the same privilege be given to the gentleman from Ohio [Gen. SHERWOOD] and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. BURLESON. In pursuance of an agreement with the gentleman from Illinois, I accept that amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] add to his request the name of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], the chairman of the Committee on Rules soon to be appointed.

Mr. BURLESON. I have no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the privilege being given to the gentlemen who have been named and who were at the last session of Congress entitled to select their seats, but I give notice that I shall object to any additional gentlemen being given that privilege. Of course, that covers the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] for unanimous consent to allow the gentlemen named to select their seats?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection that these men who have been suggested be allowed to select their seats, but I do not know where on any occasion heretofore the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the chairman of the Committee on Rules has been accorded this privilege.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the last House was accorded that privilege when Mr. Tawney was chairman, and I think the same privilege ought to be accorded now to the chairman of that committee in the new Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] for unanimous consent?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that before we begin to draw seats the Doorkeeper be instructed to see to it that everybody except Members and others entitled to the floor shall retire.

Mr. MANN. It will be impossible, Mr. Speaker, for Members to take their places back of the rail unless other people retire.

The SPEAKER. All persons within the Hall of the House, except Members and others entitled to the floor, will now retire, and the Doorkeeper and Sergeant at Arms will enforce this order.

All Members, except those to whom the privilege of drawing their seats in advance has been extended, will please retire behind the railing. Members, as their names are called, will select their seats, Democrats on the right side until it is filled, Republicans on the left side, and then Democrats over on the left side beyond the Republicans.

Members then proceeded to draw their seats in accordance with the above provisions.

THE RULES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 11.

Resolved, That the following shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, pending the reading of the rules, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

The request is, that the rules as set out in the resolution just read be printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings for the benefit of Members, in order that they may inspect them to-morrow morning; that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with, and that the resolution for the consideration of the rules go over until to-morrow, to be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal and after the reading of the President's message should it be received.

Mr. MANN. I suggest——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield for a question.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to ask the gentleman a question. I desire to make a suggestion.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield for the suggestion.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that in asking unanimous consent he also ask to have a sufficient number of copies of the resolution printed in ordinary resolution form for the use of Members of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How many would the gentleman like to have?

Mr. MANN. Oh, 500.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I make that modification of my request, that it include the printing of 500 copies of the proposed rules in document form.

The SPEAKER. You have heard the request of the gentleman from Texas for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman further whether it would be feasible to have the proposed rules printed in connection with the rules of the last House, in parallel columns, so that Members may be easily able to tell what changes are proposed.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I hardly see how that would be feasible, but I will state to the gentleman that the rules of the Fifty-third and the Sixty-first Congress have been printed in parallel columns, and there are some extra copies of those, and other copies can be printed.

Mr. MANN. Of course, Members of the House, except those who have been studying the rules of the Fifty-third Congress, or who served in the Fifty-third Congress, are not as familiar with the rules of that Congress as they are with the rules of the last Congress. I see no reason why it is not easily feasible to print in parallel columns the proposed rules and the rules of the last Congress, as a matter of information.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I suggest to the gentleman that that is hardly feasible. The other rules are printed in parallel columns, and can be placed in the RECORD alongside those proposed to-day. I should like to accommodate the gentleman, but think it is hardly practicable.

Mr. MANN. I am very frank to say to the gentleman that if they are not printed that way, I shall take the rules, clip them up myself, and put them in parallel columns. I think it would be very easy for the printing clerk to have them printed in that way.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Personally I should be very glad to extend to the gentleman every facility possible for such comparison.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will yield.

Mr. DALZELL. Are these proposed rules printed in pamphlet form?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Not as I offer them.

Mr. DALZELL. The only access Members of the House can have to the rules will be in the RECORD to-morrow morning?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. No; there will be 500 copies in document form, and they will also be printed in the RECORD. They will appear in the RECORD at 8 o'clock, and I shall insist that the documents be here as early as the gentleman wishes.

Mr. DALZELL. But Members of the House will have no opportunity to study the rules.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; there will be opportunity to study the rules and to discuss them. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows, he has already personally seen a copy of the rules about as introduced to-day.

Mr. DALZELL. I have not. I have seen the rules of the Fifty-third Congress and of the Sixty-first Congress, but I have not seen the rules as now reported.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Some gentlemen on that side of the House have seen them, as there has been no effort to prevent their inspection.

Mr. MANN. I will suggest to the gentleman that if he wishes to call up his resolution to-morrow, when the rules will not be so that they are available until to-morrow morning, it will be difficult for Members to determine what changes are made by the new rules, and it is very advisable to have them printed in parallel columns, so that Members can see just what changes have been made.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have no objection to their being printed in parallel columns, and, Mr. Speaker, will ask to modify my original request to that extent, and to make the number of copies to be printed in document form 1,000 instead of 500.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Comparison of the rules of the Sixty-first Congress, third session, with the proposed rules of the Sixty-second Congress, first session, House of Representatives.

RULES OF THE SIXTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

[Changes from the rules of the Fifty-third Congress and additional text indicated by italics.]

RULE I.

DUTIES OF THE SPEAKER.

1. The Speaker shall take the chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the Members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum, cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same.

2. He shall preserve order and decorum, and in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or in the lobby may cause the same to be cleared.

3. He shall have general control, except as provided by rule or law, of the Hall of the House, and of the corridors and passages, and of the unappropriated rooms in that part of the Capitol assigned to the use of the House, until further notice.

4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and subpœnas of, or issued by order of, the House, and decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal by any Member, on which appeal no Member shall speak more than once, unless by permission of the House.

5. He shall rise to put a question, but may state it sitting; and shall put questions in this form, to wit: "As many as are in favor (as the question may be) say 'aye';" and after the affirmative voice is expressed, "As many as are opposed, say 'no.'" If he doubts, or a division is called for, the House shall divide; those in the affirmative of the question shall first rise from their seats, and then those in the negative; if he still doubts, or a count is required by at least one-fifth of a quorum, he shall name one from each side of the question to tell the Members in the affirmative and negative; which being reported, he shall rise and state the decision.

6. He shall not be required to vote in ordinary legislative proceedings, except where his vote would be decisive, or where the House is engaged in voting by ballot; and in all cases of a tie vote the question shall be lost.

7. He shall have the right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment: Provided, however, That in case of his illness, he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding 10 days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment, the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore to act during his absence.

RULE II.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

There shall be elected by a viva voce vote, at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified, a Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Chaplain, each of whom shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office to the best of his knowledge and ability, and to keep the secrets of the House; and each shall appoint all of the employees of his department provided for by law.

RULE III.

DUTIES OF THE CLERK.

1. The Clerk shall, at the commencement of the first session of each Congress, call the Members to order, proceed to call the roll of Members by States in alphabetical order, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, call the House to order, preserve order and decorum, and decide all questions of order, subject to appeal by any Member.

2. He shall make and cause to be printed and delivered to each Member, or mailed to his address, at the commencement of every regular session of Congress, a list of the reports which it is the duty of any officer or department to make to Congress, referring to the act or resolution and page of the volume of the laws or Journal in which it may be contained, and placing under the name of each officer the list of reports required of him to be made.

3. He shall note all questions of order, with the decisions thereon, the record of which shall be printed as an appendix to the Journal of each session; and complete, as soon after the close of the session as possible, the printing and distribution to Members and Delegates of the Journal of the House, together with an accurate and complete index; retain in the library at his office, for the use of the Members and officers of the House, and not to be withdrawn therefrom, two copies of all the books and printed documents deposited there; send, at the end of each session, a printed copy of the Journal thereof to the Executive and to each branch of the legislature of every State and Territory; preserve for and deliver or mail to each Member and Delegate an extra copy, in good binding, of all documents printed by order of either House of the Congress to which he belonged; attest and affix the seal of the House to all writs, warrants, and subpœnas issued by order of the House, certify to the passage of all bills and joint resolutions, make or approve all contracts, bargains, or agreements relative to furnishing any matter or thing, or for the performance of any labor for the House of Representatives, in pursuance of law or order of the House, keep full and accurate accounts of the disbursements out of the contingent fund of the House, keep the stationery account of the Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law. He shall pay to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives, the last day of each month, the amount of their salaries that shall be due them; and when the last day of the month falls on Sunday he shall pay them on the day next preceding.

PROPOSED RULES OF THE SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

Resolved, That the following shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress:

RULE I.

DUTIES OF THE SPEAKER.

1. The Speaker shall take the chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the Members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum, cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same.

2. He shall preserve order and decorum, and in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or in the lobby may cause the same to be cleared.

3. He shall have general control, except as provided by rule or law, of the Hall of the House, and of the corridors and passages, and the disposal of the unappropriated rooms in that part of the Capitol assigned to the use of the House until further order.

4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and subpœnas of, or issued by order of, the House, and decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal by any Member, on which appeal no Member shall speak more than once, unless by permission of the House.

5. He shall rise to put a question, but may state it sitting; and shall put questions in this form, to wit: "As many as are in favor (as the question may be) say 'aye';" and after the affirmative voice is expressed, "As many as are opposed, say 'no';" if he doubts, or a division is called for, the House shall divide; those in the affirmative of the question shall first rise from their seats, and then those in the negative; if he still doubts, or count is required by at least one-fifth of a quorum, he shall name one from each side of the question, to tell the Members in the affirmative and negative; which being reported, he shall rise and state the decision.

6. He shall not be required to vote in ordinary legislative proceedings, except when his vote would be decisive, or where the House is engaged in voting by ballot; and in cases of tie vote the question shall be lost.

7. He shall have a right to name any Member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment: Provided, however, That in case of his illness he may make such appointment for a period not to exceed 10 days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment, the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore, to act during his absence.

RULE II.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

There shall be elected by a viva voce vote at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified, a Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Chaplain, each of whom shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office, to the best of his knowledge and ability, and to keep the secrets of the House, and each shall appoint all of the employees of his department provided for by law.

RULE III.

DUTIES OF THE CLERK.

1. The Clerk shall, at the commencement of the session of each Congress, call the Members to order, proceed to call the roll of the Members by States in alphabetical order, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, preserve order and decorum and decide all questions of order, subject to appeal by any Member.

2. He shall make and cause to be printed and delivered to each Member, or mailed to his address, at the commencement of every regular session of Congress, a list of reports which it is the duty of any officer or department to make to Congress, referring to the act or resolution and page of the volume of the laws or Journal in which it may be contained, and placing under the name of each officer the list of reports required of him to be made.

3. He shall note all questions of order, with the decisions thereon, the record of which shall be printed as an appendix to the Journal of each session; and complete, as soon after the close of the session as possible, the printing and distribution to Members and Delegates of the Journal of the House, together with an accurate and complete index; retain in the library at his office, for the use of the Members and officers of the House, and not to be withdrawn therefrom, two copies of all the books and printed documents deposited there; send, at the end of each session, a printed copy of the Journal thereof to the Executive and to each branch of legislature of every State and Territory; preserve for and deliver or mail to each Member and Delegate an extra copy, in good binding, of all documents printed by order of either House of the Congress to which he belonged; attest and affix the seal of the House to all writs, warrants, and subpœnas issued by order of the House; certify to the passage of all bills and joint resolutions; make or approve all contracts, bargains, or agreements relative to furnishing any matter or thing, or for the performance of any labor for the House of Representatives, in pursuance of law or order of the House; keep full and accurate accounts of the disbursements out of the contingent fund of the House; keep the stationery accounts of Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law. He shall pay to the officers and employees of the House of Representatives, on the first day of each month, the amount of their salaries that shall be due them; and when the first day of the month falls on Sunday he shall pay them on the next day preceding.

RULE IV.

DUTIES OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS.

1. It shall be the duty of the Sergeant at Arms to attend the House and the Committee of the Whole during their sittings, to maintain order under the direction of the Speaker or Chairman, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, under the direction of the Clerk; execute the commands of the House, and all processes issued by authority thereof, directed to him by the Speaker; keep the accounts for the pay and mileage of Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law.

2. The symbol of his office shall be the mace, which shall be borne by him while enforcing order on the floor.

RULE V.

DUTIES OF THE DOORKEEPER.

1. The Doorkeeper shall enforce strictly the rules relating to the privileges of the Hall and be responsible to the House for the official conduct of his employees.

2. At the commencement and close of each session of Congress he shall take an inventory of all the furniture, books, and other public property in the several committee and other rooms under his charge, and report the same to the House, which report shall be referred to the Committee on Accounts to ascertain and determine the amount for which he shall be held liable for missing articles.

3. He shall allow no person to enter the room over the Hall of the House during its sittings; and 15 minutes before the hour of the meeting of the House each day he shall see that the floor is cleared of all persons except those privileged to remain, and kept so until 10 minutes after adjournment.

RULE VI.

DUTIES OF THE POSTMASTER.

The Postmaster shall superintend the post office kept in the Capitol for the accommodation of Representatives, Delegates, and officers of the House, and be held responsible for the prompt and safe delivery of their mail.

RULE VII.

The Chaplain shall attend at the commencement of each day's sitting of the House and open the same with prayer.

RULE VIII.

OF THE MEMBERS.

1. Every Member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and shall vote on each question put, unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

2. Pairs shall be announced by the Clerk, after the completion of the second roll call, from a written list furnished him, and signed by the Member making the statement to the Clerk, which list shall be published in the RECORD as a part of the proceedings, immediately following the names of those not voting: Provided, That pairs shall be announced but once during the same legislative day.

RULE IX.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members, individually, in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to adjourn.

RULE X.

OF COMMITTEES.

(The principal changes in this rule consist of an increase of from 1 to 3 members in many of the committees; also the addition of 4 recently provided committees.)

1. Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint, at the commencement of each Congress, the following standing committees, viz:

On Elections, 3 committees, to consist of 9 members each, to be called No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3, respectively. (This committee divided into 3 committees in the Fifty-fourth Congress.)

The Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall provide that business under paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV shall be set aside by a vote of less than two-thirds of the Members present; nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

62. No committee, except the Committee on Rules, shall sit during the sitting of the House, without special leave.

[The last clause of this rule in the Fifty-third Congress, which requires appropriation bills to be reported within a certain time, is omitted here.]

RULE XII.

DELEGATES.

1. The Speaker shall appoint from among the Delegates one additional member on each of the following committees, viz: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Agriculture; Military Affairs; Post Office and Post Roads; Public Lands; Indian Affairs; Private Land Claims; and Mines and Mining; and two on Territories; and they shall possess in their respective committees the same powers and privileges as in the House, and may make any motion except to reconsider.

2. The Resident Commissioner to the United States from Porto Rico shall possess the same powers and privileges as to committee service and in the House as are possessed by Delegates; and shall be competent to serve on the Committee on Insular Affairs as an additional member.

RULE XIII.

CALENDARS AND REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

1. There shall be three calendars of business reported from committees, viz:

First. A Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

Second. A House Calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

Third. A Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, to which shall be referred all bills of a private character.

2. All reports of committees (in the rule of the Fifty-third Congress this mode of making reports was limited to private bills, public bills being reported in the "morning hour" for the call of committees, as per clause 2 of Rule XXIV), except as provided in clause 61 of Rule XI, together with the views of the minority, shall be delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar under the direction of the Speaker, in accordance with the foregoing clause, and the titles or subject thereof shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD (this proviso takes place of clause 3 of the Rules of the Fifty-third Congress): Provided, That bills reported adversely shall be laid on the table, unless the committee reporting a bill at the time, or any Member within three days thereafter, shall request its reference to the calendar, when it shall be referred, as provided in clause 1 of this rule.

3. After a bill which has been favorably reported shall have been upon either the House or the Union Calendar for three days any Member may file with the Clerk a notice that he desires such a bill placed upon a special calendar to be known as the "Calendar for Unanimous Consent." On days when it shall be in order to move to suspend the rules the Speaker shall, immediately after the approval of the Journal, direct the Clerk to call the bills upon the "Calendar for Unanimous Consent." Should objection be made to the consideration of any bill so called, it shall immediately be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and it shall not thereafter be placed thereon.

RULE XIV.

OF DECORUM AND DEBATE.

1. When any Member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

2. When two or more Members rise at once, the Speaker shall name the Member who is first to speak; and no Member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee, except as further provided in this rule.

3. The Member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

4. If any Member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any Member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another Member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if the decision is in favor of the Member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

6. No Member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every Member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no Member shall walk out of or across the hall, nor, when a Member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no Member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause. Neither shall ANY person be allowed to smoke upon the floor of the House at any time. (This prohibition applies to Members as well as others.)

report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

57. No committee, except the Committee on Rules, shall sit during the sitting of the House, without special leave.

RULE XII.

DELEGATES.

1. The House shall elect from among the Delegates one additional member on each of the following committees, viz: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Agriculture; Military Affairs; the Post Office and Post Roads; Public Lands; Indian Affairs; and Mines and Mining; and two on Territories; and they shall possess in their respective committees the same powers and privileges as in the House, and may make any motion except to reconsider.

2. The Resident Commissioner to the United States from Porto Rico shall possess the same powers and privileges as to committee service and in the House as are possessed by Delegates; and shall be competent to serve on the Committee on Insular Affairs as an additional member.

RULE XIII.

CALENDARS AND REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

1. There shall be three calendars to which all business reported from committees shall be referred, viz:

First. A Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

Second. A House Calendar, to which shall be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

Third. A Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, to which shall be referred all bills of a private character.

2. All reports of committees, except as provided in clause 56 of Rule XI, together with the views of the minority, shall be delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar under the direction of the Speaker, in accordance with the foregoing clause, and the titles or subject thereof shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD: Provided, That bills reported adversely shall be laid on the table, unless the committee reporting a bill, at the time, or any Member within three days thereafter, shall request its reference to the calendar, when it shall be referred, as provided in clause 1 of this rule.

3. After a bill which has been favorably reported shall be upon either the House or the Union Calendar, any Member may file with the Clerk a notice that he desires such a bill placed upon a special calendar to be known as the "Calendar for Unanimous Consent." On days when it shall be in order to move to suspend the rules the Speaker shall, immediately after the approval of the Journal, direct the Clerk to call the bills which have been for three days upon the "Calendar for Unanimous Consent." Should objection be made to the consideration of any bill so called, it shall immediately be stricken from such calendar; but such bill may be restored to the calendar at the instance of the Member, and if again objected to, it shall be immediately stricken from such calendar, and shall not thereafter be placed thereon: Provided, That the same bill shall not be called twice on the same legislative day.

4. There shall also be a Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees, as provided in clause 4 of Rule XXVII.

5. Calendars shall be printed daily.

RULE XIV.

OF DECORUM AND DEBATE.

1. When any Member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

2. When two or more Members rise at once, the Speaker shall name the Member who is first to speak; and no Member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee, except as further provided in this rule.

3. The Member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

4. If any Member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any Member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another Member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if the decision is in favor of the Member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as to the House may deem proper.

5. If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

6. No Member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every Member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no Member shall walk out of or across the hall, nor, when a Member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no Member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause. Neither shall any person be allowed to smoke upon the floor of the House at any time.

RULE XV.

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll call the names of the Members shall be called alphabetically, by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, in which case the name of the State shall be added; and if there be two such Members from the same State, the whole name shall be called, and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote [or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule]. (This did not apply in the rule of the Fifty-third Congress.)

2. In the absence of a quorum, 15 members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members, and in all calls of the House (clause 2 takes the place of clause 3 in Rule XV of Fifty-third Congress, with which compare) the doors shall be closed, the names of the Members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted (transposed in the rule of the Fifty-third Congress); and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant at Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured and retained; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged. Members who voluntarily appear shall, unless the House otherwise direct, be immediately admitted to the Hall of the House, and they shall report their names to the Clerk to be entered upon the Journal as present.

3. On the demand of any Member, or at the suggestion of the Speaker, the names of Members sufficient to make a quorum in the Hall of the House who do not vote shall be noted by the Clerk and recorded in the Journal, and reported to the Speaker with the names of the Members voting, and be counted and announced in determining the presence of a quorum to do business. (This clause supersedes in part clause 2 of Rule XV, Fifty-third Congress.)

4. Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause, unless the House shall adjourn there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant at Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each Member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each Member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant at Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote, and his vote shall be recorded. If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the House, the Speaker shall declare that a quorum is constituted, and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with. At any time after the roll call has been completed, the Speaker may entertain a motion to adjourn, if seconded by a majority of those present, to be ascertained by actual count by the Speaker; and if the House adjourns, all proceedings under this section shall be vacated. But this section of the rule shall not apply to the sessions of Friday night until further order of the House. (This clause is a complete innovation from the rule in the Fifty-third Congress.)

RULE XVI.

ON MOTIONS, THEIR PRECEDENCE, ETC.

1. Every motion made to the House and entertained by the Speaker shall be reduced to writing on the demand of any Member, and shall be entered on the Journal with the name of the Member making it, unless it is withdrawn the same day.

2. When a motion has been made, the Speaker shall state it or (if it be in writing) cause it to be read aloud by the Clerk before being debated, and it shall then be in possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

3. When any motion or proposition is made, the question, Will the House now consider it? shall not be put unless demanded by a Member.

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but (the words "to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn" and "to take a recess" in clause 4 of the rule of the Fifty-third Congress are omitted here) to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend, or postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question. After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution. (See clause 1, Rule XVII, of the Fifty-third Congress for motion to recommit.)

5. The hour at which the House adjourns shall be entered on the Journal. (The motion to fix day, for a recess, etc., contained in this clause of the rule of the Fifty-third Congress is here omitted.)

6. On the demand of any Member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

7. A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert; and no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

8. Pending a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.

9. At any time after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order, by direction of the appropriate committees ("after the expiration of the morning hour" was the rule in the Fifty-third Congress), to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue, or general appropriation bills.

10. No dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Speaker. (This clause of the rule is not contained in the rules of the Fifty-third Congress.)

RULE XV.

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll call the names of the Members shall be called alphabetically, by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, in which case the name of the State shall be added; and if there be two such Members from the same State, the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

2. In the absence of a quorum, 15 Members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the doors shall be closed, the names of the Members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant at Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured and retained; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged. 10. No dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Speaker.

RULE XVII.

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of Members voting, if a quorum be present, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. (Provision of the Fifty-third Congress for 30 minutes' debate on the question is omitted here, but is transferred to Rule XXVIII, "suspension of the rules," and changed to 40 minutes.) The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments, and include the bill to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion, for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee. (Motion to lay on table on second and third reading, as in rule of the Fifty-third Congress, omitted here.)

2. A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is ordered, unless it shall appear upon an actual count by the Speaker that a quorum is not present.

3. All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question, and pending such motion, shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

RULE XVIII.

RECONSIDERATION.

1. When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report or a motion to adjourn, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any Member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

2. No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee, or reported therefrom for printing and recommitment, shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider; and all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

RULE XIX.

OF AMENDMENTS.

When a motion or proposition is under consideration a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon. Amendments to the title of a bill or resolution shall not be in order until after its passage, and shall be decided without debate.

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

RULE XXI.

ON BILLS.

1. Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a Member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto. (The exception from the inhibition against changing existing law, where the change effects reduction or retrenchment of expenditures, contained in the rule of the Fifty-third Congress, is here omitted in the rule of the Sixty-first Congress.)

3. No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, viz: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts. (The provision for the introduction and reference of river and harbor bills, private bills, etc., as contained in clause 3 of this rule in the Fifty-third Congress is here omitted.)

RULE XXII.

OF PETITIONS, MEMORIALS, BILLS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

1. Members having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials and bills of a private nature, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal, with the names of the Members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript of such entry to the official reporters of debates for publication in the RECORD.

2. Any petition or memorial or private bill excluded under this rule shall be returned to the Member from whom it was received; and peti-

RULE XVII.

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of Members voting, if a quorum be present, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments, and include the bill to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for, or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

2. A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is ordered, unless it shall appear upon an actual count by the Speaker that a quorum is not present.

3. All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question, and pending such motion, shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

RULE XVIII.

RECONSIDERATION.

1. When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report or a motion to adjourn, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any Member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

2. No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee, or reported therefrom for printing and recommitment, shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider; and all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

RULE XIX.

OF AMENDMENTS.

When a motion or proposition is under consideration a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon. Amendments to the title of a bill or resolution shall not be in order until after its passage, and shall be decided without debate.

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

RULE XXI.

ON BILLS.

1. Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a Member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

3. No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

4. No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, viz: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Public Lands, and to the Committee on Accounts.

RULE XXII.

OF PETITIONS, MEMORIALS, BILLS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

1. Members having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials and bills of a private nature, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal, with the names of the Members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript of such entry to the official reporters of debates for publication in the RECORD.

2. Any petition or memorial or private bill excluded under this rule shall be returned to the Member from whom it was received; and petitions and private bills which have been inappropriately referred may, by the direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented; and an erroneous reference of a petition or private bill under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee to consider or report the same.

3. All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, indorsed with the names of Members introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD of the next day, and correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House, without debate, in accordance with Rule XI, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

4. When a bill, resolution, or memorial is introduced "by request," these words shall be entered upon the Journal and printed in the RECORD.

5. All resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of executive departments shall be reported to the House within one week after presentation.

RULE XXIII.

OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE.

1. In all cases, in forming a Committee of the Whole House, the Speaker shall leave his chair after appointing a Chairman to preside, who shall, in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or lobby have power to cause the same to be cleared.

2. Whenever a Committee of the Whole House or of the Whole House on the state of the Union finds itself without a quorum, [which shall consist of one hundred Members,] (a quorum of the committee was formerly the same as that of the House) the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, [or referring any claim to the Court of Claims,] (not contained in rule of Fifty-third Congress) shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

4. In Committees of the Whole House business on their calendars may be taken up in regular order (order of consideration changed from the rule of the Fifty-third Congress, being determined by the committee, instead of by the House, as formerly), or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee, but bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any Member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the Member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon, but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

6. The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minute debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate. (Compare with clause 6 of this rule in the Fifty-third Congress.)

7. A motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend, and if carried shall be considered equivalent to its rejection. Whenever a bill is reported from a Committee of the Whole with an adverse recommendation and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to the said committee without further action by the House, but before the question of concurrence is submitted it is in order to entertain a motion to refer the bill to any committee, with or without instructions, and when the same is again reported to the House it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole without debate.

8. The rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committees of the Whole House so far as they may be applicable.

RULE XXIV.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. The daily order of business shall be as follows:
First. Prayer by the Chaplain.
Second. Reading and approval of the Journal.
Third. Correction of reference of public bills.
Fourth. Disposal of business on the Speaker's table.
Fifth. Unfinished business.
Sixth. The morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees.
Seventh. Motions to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
Eighth. Orders of the day. (This clause supersedes in part clauses 1, 2, and 5 of Rule XXIV of the Fifty-third Congress.)

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from heads of departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by Members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a Committee of the Whole, be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee. (This clause supersedes in part clause 1, Rule XXIV, Fifty-third Congress.)

tions and private bills which have been inappropriately referred may, by the direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented; and an erroneous reference of a petition or private bill under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee to consider or report the same.

3. All other bills, memorials, and resolutions may, in like manner, be delivered, indorsed with the names of Members introducing them, to the Speaker, to be by him referred, and the titles and references thereof and of all bills, resolutions, and documents referred under the rules shall be entered on the Journal and printed in the RECORD of the next day, and correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House, without debate, in accordance with Rule XI, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

4. When a bill, resolution, or memorial is introduced "by request," these words shall be entered upon the Journal and printed in the RECORD.

5. All resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of executive departments shall be reported to the House within one week after presentation.

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

4. In Committees of the Whole House business on their calendars may be taken up in regular order, or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was determined by the House at the time of going into committee, but bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any Member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the Member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon, but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

6. The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minute debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

7. A motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend, and if carried shall be considered equivalent to its rejection. Whenever a bill is reported from a Committee of the Whole with an adverse recommendation and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to the said committee without further action by the House, but before the question of concurrence is submitted it is in order to entertain a motion to refer the bill to any committee, with or without instructions, and when the same is again reported to the House it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole without debate.

Third. Correction of reference of public bills.
Fourth. Disposal of business on the Speaker's table.
Fifth. Unfinished business.
Sixth. The morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees.
Seventh. Motions to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
Eighth. Orders of the day.

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from heads of departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by Members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

2. The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment, except business in the morning hour, shall be resumed as soon as the business on the Speaker's table is finished, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of, and the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules. (This clause supersedes in part clause 5 of this rule in the Fifty-third Congress.)

4. After the unfinished business has been disposed of, the Speaker shall call each standing committee in regular order, and then select committees, and each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar, and if the Speaker shall not complete the call of the committees before the House passes to other business, he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the last bill under consideration: Provided, That whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on two days, it shall not be in order to call up any other bill until the other committees have been called in their turn. (This clause supersedes and takes the place of clause 4 of this rule in the Fifty-third Congress.)

5. After one hour shall have been devoted to the consideration of bills called up by committees, it shall be in order, pending consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; or, when authorized by a committee, to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a particular bill, to which motion one amendment only, designating another bill, may be made; and if either motion be determined in the negative, it shall not be in order to make either motion again until the disposal of the matter under consideration or discussion. (This clause supersedes in part clause 6 of the rule in the Fifty-third Congress.)

6. On Friday of each week, after the unfinished business (substituted for "morning hour") has been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and if this motion fails, then public business shall be in order as on other days. (Supersedes third paragraph of clause 6 of this rule in the Fifty-third Congress.)

RULE XXV.

PRIORITY OF BUSINESS.

All questions relating to the priority of business shall be decided by a majority without debate.

RULE XXVI.

PRIVATE AND DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

1. Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House.

2. The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes. (Substituted for clause 3 in this rule of the Fifty-third Congress.)

3. The second and fourth Mondays in each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

4. On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine. On such a motion there may be debate not to exceed five minutes for and against. On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules; but bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. This rule shall not apply during the last two weeks of the session. It shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a motion for a recess on any Wednesday except during the last two weeks of the session. (This clause was first adopted March 1, 1909, and has no analogy with any rule of preceding Congresses.)

RULE XXVII.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

All business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress in the same manner as if no adjournment had taken place.

RULE XXVIII.

CHANGE OR SUSPENSION OF RULES.

1. No rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the Members voting, a quorum being present; nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of a session.

2. All motions to suspend the rules shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority of tellers, if demanded.

3. The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment, except business in the morning hour, shall be resumed as soon as the business on the Speaker's table is finished, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of, and the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules.

4. After the unfinished business has been disposed of, the Speaker shall call each standing committee in regular order, and then select committees, and each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar, and if the Speaker shall not complete the call of the committees before the House passes to other business, he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the last bill under consideration: Provided, That whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on two days, it shall not be in order to call up any other bill until the other committees have been called in their turn.

5. After one hour shall have been devoted to the consideration of bills called up by committees, it shall be in order, pending consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; or, when authorized by a committee, to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a particular bill, to which motion one amendment only, designating another bill, may be made; and if either motion be determined in the negative, it shall not be in order to make either motion again until the disposal of the matter under consideration or discussion.

6. On Friday of each week, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, it shall be in order to entertain a motion for the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar in the following order: On the second and fourth Fridays of each month preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims and bills removing political disabilities and bills removing the charge of desertion. On every Friday except the second and fourth Fridays the House shall give preference to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims, alternating between the two committees.

7. On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of this rule, unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine. On such a motion there may be debate not to exceed five minutes for and against. On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules; but bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. This rule shall not apply during the last two weeks of the session. It shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a motion for a recess on any Wednesday except during the last two weeks of the session.

8. The second and fourth Mondays in each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

RULE XXV.

PRIORITY OF BUSINESS.

All questions relating to the priority of business shall be decided by a majority without debate.

RULE XXVI.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

All business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress in the same manner as if no adjournment had taken place.

RULE XXVII.

CHANGE OR SUSPENSION OF RULES.

1. No rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the Members voting, a quorum being present; nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of a session.

2. All motions to suspend the rules shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority by tellers, if demanded.

3. When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for forty (changed from 30 minutes. Compare this clause with clause 1, Rule XVII, "Previous question." Fifty-third Congress) minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of and one-half to debate in opposition to such proposition; and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

4. Any Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to discharge a committee from further consideration of any public bill or joint resolution which may have been referred to such committee. All such motions shall be entered in the Journal and printed on the calendar under an appropriate heading. Immediately after the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall have been called on any Monday, it shall be in order to call up any such motion which shall have been entered at least seven days prior thereto. Recognition for such motions shall be in the order in which they have been entered. Such motions before being submitted to the House shall be seconded by a majority by tellers. If a second be ordered, debate on such motion shall be limited to twenty minutes, one-half thereof in favor of the proposition and one-half in opposition thereto. Such motions shall have precedence over motions to suspend the rules and shall require for adoption an affirmative vote of a majority of the membership of the House. Whenever such a motion shall prevail the bill so taken from the consideration of a committee shall thereupon be placed upon its appropriate calendar, and upon call of the committee from which any bill has been so taken it may be called for consideration by any Member prior to any bill reported by said committee at a date subsequent to the discharge of said committee. (This clause, adopted June 17, 1910, has no analogy with any previous rule.)

RULE XXIX.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

1. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition. And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

2. It shall not be in order to consider the report of a committee of conference until such report and the accompanying statement shall have been printed in the Record, except on either of the six days preceding the end of a session. (This clause was adopted in 1902.)

RULE XXX.

SECRET SESSION.

Whenever confidential communications are received from the President of the United States, or whenever the Speaker or any Member shall inform the House that he has communications which he believes ought to be kept secret for the present, the House shall be cleared of all persons except the Members and officers thereof, and so continue during the reading of such communications, the debates and proceedings thereon, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

RULE XXXI.

READING OF PAPERS.

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

RULE XXXII.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

1. At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls, of marble or other material, equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished; and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

RULE XXXIII.

HALL OF THE HOUSE.

The Hall of the House shall be used only for the legislative business of the House and for the caucus meetings of its Members, except upon occasions where the House by resolution agree to take part in any ceremonies to be observed therein; and the Speaker shall not entertain a motion for the suspension of this rule.

RULE XXXIV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

1. The persons hereinafter named, and none other, shall be admitted to the Hall of the House or rooms leading thereto, viz: The President and Vice President of the United States and their private secretaries, judges of the Supreme Court, Members of Congress and Members-elect, contestants in election cases during the pendency of their cases in the House, the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, heads of departments, foreign ministers, governors of States, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the Librarian of Congress and his assistant in charge of the Law Library, the Resident Commissioner to the United States from Porto Rico, such persons as have, by name, received the thanks of Congress, ex-Members of the House of Representatives who are not interested in any claim or directly in any bill pending before Congress, and clerks of committees when business from

3. When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for 40 minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of and one-half to debate in opposition to such proposition; and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

4. Any Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to discharge a committee from further consideration of any public bill or joint resolution which may have been referred to such committee 15 days prior thereto. All such motions shall be entered in the Journal and printed on a calendar to be known as a "Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees." Immediately after the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall have been called on any Monday, it shall be in order to call up any such motion which shall have been entered at least 7 days prior thereto. Recognition for such motions shall be in the order in which they have been entered. When such motion shall be called up, the bill shall be read by title only prior to a second being ordered by tellers, and no such motion shall be entertained as to a bill or joint resolution the title of which contains more than 100 words; after the reading of the bill by title the motion shall not be submitted to the House unless seconded by a majority by tellers; if such motion fails of a second, it shall be immediately stricken from the calendar and shall not be thereafter placed thereon. If a second be ordered, debate on such motion shall be limited to 20 minutes, one-half thereof in favor of the proposition and one-half in opposition thereto. Such motions shall have precedence over motions to suspend the rules, and shall require for adoption an affirmative vote of a majority of the membership of the House. Whenever such a motion shall prevail, the bill so taken from the consideration of a committee shall thereupon be placed upon its appropriate calendar, and upon call of the committee from which any bill has been so taken it may be called up for consideration by any Member prior to any bill reported by said committee at a date subsequent to the discharge of said committee: Provided, No Member shall have upon such calendar more than two motions at the same time.

RULE XXVIII.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

1. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition. And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

2. It shall not be in order to consider the report of a committee of conference until such report and the accompanying statement shall have been printed in the RECORD, except on either of the six days preceding the end of a session.

RULE XXIX.

SECRET SESSION.

Whenever confidential communications are received from the President of the United States, or whenever the Speaker or any Member shall inform the House that he has communications which he believes ought to be kept secret for the present, the House shall be cleared of all persons except the Members and officers thereof, and so continue during the reading of such communications, the debates and proceedings thereon, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

RULE XXX.

READING OF PAPERS.

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

RULE XXXI.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

1. At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls, of marble or other material, equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished; and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

RULE XXXII.

HALL OF THE HOUSE.

The Hall of the House shall be used only for the legislative business of the House and for the caucus meetings of its Members, except upon occasions where the House by resolution agree to take part in any ceremonies to be observed therein; and the Speaker shall not entertain a motion for the suspension of this rule.

RULE XXXIII.

OF ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

1. The persons hereinafter named, and none other, shall be admitted to the Hall of the House or rooms leading thereto, viz: The President and Vice President of the United States and their private secretaries, judges of the Supreme Court, Members of Congress and Members elect, contestants in election cases during the pendency of their cases in the House, the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, heads of departments, foreign ministers, governors of States, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the Librarian of Congress and his assistant in charge of the Law Library, the Resident Commissioner to the United States from Porto Rico, the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, such persons as have, by name, received the thanks of Congress, ex-Members of the House of Representatives who are not interested in any claim or directly in any bill pending before their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule or to present from the chair the request of any Member for unanimous consent.

2. There shall be excluded at all times from the Hall of the House of Representatives and the cloakrooms all persons not entitled to the privilege of the floor during the session, except that until 15 minutes of the hour of the meeting of the House persons employed in its service, accredited members of the press entitled to admission to the press gallery, and other persons on request of Members, by card or in writing, may be admitted. (This clause adopted in 1902.)

RULE XXXV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE GALLERIES.

The Speaker shall set aside a portion of the west gallery for the use of the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, justices of the Supreme Court, foreign ministers and suites, and the members of their respective families, and shall also set aside another portion of the same gallery for the accommodation of persons to be admitted on the card of Members. The southerly half of the east gallery shall be assigned exclusively for the use of the families of Members of Congress, in which the Speaker shall control one bench, and on request of a Member the Speaker shall issue a card of admission to his family, which shall include their visitors, and no other person shall be admitted to this section.

RULE XXXVI.

OFFICIAL AND OTHER REPORTERS.

1. The appointment and removal, for cause, of the official reporters of the House, including stenographers of committees, and the manner of the execution of their duties, shall be vested in the Speaker.

2. Stenographers and reporters, other than the official reporters of the House, wishing to take down the debates and proceedings may be admitted by the Speaker to the reporters' gallery over the Speaker's chair, under such regulations as he may, from time to time, prescribe; (the remainder of this clause consists of amendments made from time to time down to February, 1909) and he may assign one seat on the floor to Associated Press reporters, one to the Sun Press Association, one to the United Press Association, one to the New York Herald Syndicate, and one to the Hearst News Service, and regulate the occupation of the same. And the Speaker may admit to the floor, under such regulations as he may prescribe, one additional representative of each press association.

RULE XXXVII.

PAY OF WITNESSES.

The rule for paying witnesses subpœnaed to appear before the House or either of its committees shall be as follows: For each day a witness shall attend, the sum of $2; for each mile he shall travel in coming to and going from the place of examination, the sum of 5 cents each way; but nothing shall be paid for traveling when the witness has been summoned at the place of trial.

RULE XXXVIII.

PAPERS.

The clerks of the several committees of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence taken by such committee under the order of the House during the said Congress and not reported to the House; and in the event of the failure or neglect of any clerk of a committee to comply with this rule the Clerk of the House shall, within three days thereafter, take into his keeping all such papers and testimony.

RULE XXXIX.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

No memorial or other paper presented to the House shall be withdrawn from its files without its leave, and if withdrawn therefrom certified copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Clerk; but when an act may pass for the settlement of a claim the Clerk is authorized to transmit to the officer charged with the settlement thereof the papers on file in his office relating to such claim, or may loan temporarily to an officer or bureau of the executive departments any papers on file in his office relating to any matter pending before such officer or bureau, taking proper receipt therefor.

RULE XL.

BALLOT.

In all other cases of ballot than for committees a majority of the votes given shall be necessary to an election, and where there shall not be such a majority on the first ballot the ballots shall be repeated until a majority be obtained; and in all balloting blanks shall be rejected and not taken into the count in enumeration of votes or reported by the tellers.

RULE XLI.

MESSAGES.

Messages received from the Senate and the President of the United States giving notice of bills passed or approved shall be entered in the Journal and published in the RECORD of that day's proceedings.

RULE XLII.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Estimates of appropriations and all other communications from the executive departments intended for the consideration of any committees of the House shall be addressed to the Speaker and by him referred as provided by clause 2 of Rule XXIV.

RULE XLIII.

QUALIFICATIONS OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

No person shall be an officer of the House, or continue in its employment, who shall be an agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or be interested in such claim otherwise than as an original claimant; and it shall be the duty of the Committee on Accounts to inquire into and report to the House any violation of this rule.

Congress, and clerks of committees when business from their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule or to present from the chair the request of any Member for unanimous consent.

2. There shall be excluded at all times from the Hall of the House of Representatives and the cloakrooms all persons not entitled to the privilege of the floor during the session, except that until 15 minutes of the hour of the meeting of the House persons employed in its service, accredited members of the press entitled to admission to the press gallery, and other persons on request of Members, by card or in writing, may be admitted.

RULE XXXIV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE GALLERIES.

The Speaker shall set aside a portion of the west gallery for the use of the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, justices of the Supreme Court, foreign ministers and suites, and the members of their respective families, and shall also set aside another portion of the same gallery for the accommodation of persons to be admitted on the card of Members. RULE XXXV.

OFFICIAL AND OTHER REPORTERS.

1. The appointment and removal, for cause, of the official reporters of the House, including stenographers of committees, and the manner of the execution of their duties, shall be vested in the Speaker.

2. Such portion of the gallery over the Speaker's chair as may be necessary to accommodate representatives of the press wishing to report the debates and proceedings shall be set aside for their use, and reputable reporters and correspondents shall be admitted thereto under such regulations as the Speaker may from time to time prescribe; and he may assign one seat on the floor to Associated Press reporters, one to the Sun Press Association, one to the United Press Associations, one to the National News Association, and one to the New York Herald Syndicate, and regulate the occupation of the same. And the Speaker may admit to the floor, under such regulations as he may prescribe, one additional representative of each press association.

RULE XXXVI.

PAY OF WITNESSES.

The rule for paying witnesses subpœnaed to appear before the House or either of its committees shall be as follows: For each day a witness shall attend, the sum of $2; for each mile he shall travel in coming to and going from the place of examination, the sum of 5 cents each way; but nothing shall be paid for traveling when the witness has been summoned at the place of trial.

RULE XXXVII.

PAPERS.

The clerks of the several committees of the House, shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence taken by such committee under the order of the House during the said Congress and not reported to the House; and in the event of the failure or neglect of any clerk of a committee to comply with this rule the Clerk of the House shall, within three days thereafter, take into his keeping all such papers and testimony.

RULE XXXVIII.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

No memorial or other paper presented to the House shall be withdrawn from its files without its leave, and if withdrawn therefrom certified copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Clerk; but when an act may pass for the settlement of a claim the Clerk is authorized to transmit to the officer charged with the settlement thereof the papers on file in his office relating to such claim, or may loan temporarily to an officer or bureau of the executive departments any papers on file in his office relating to any matter pending before such officer or bureau, taking proper receipt therefor.

RULE XXXIX.

BALLOT.

In all cases of ballot a majority of the votes given shall be necessary to an election, and where there shall not be such a majority on the first ballot the ballots shall be repeated until a majority be obtained; and in all balloting blanks shall be rejected and not taken into the count in enumeration of votes or reported by the tellers.

RULE XL.

MESSAGES.

Messages received from the Senate and the President of the United States giving notice of bills passed or approved shall be entered in the Journal and published in the RECORD of that day's proceedings.

RULE XLI.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Estimates of appropriations and all other communications from the executive departments intended for the consideration of any committees of the House shall be addressed to the Speaker and by him referred as provided by clause 2 of Rule XXIV.

RULE XLII.

QUALIFICATIONS OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

No person shall be an officer of the House, or continue in its employment, who shall be an agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or be interested in such claim otherwise than as an original claimant; and it shall be the duty of the Committee on Accounts to inquire into and report to the House any violation of this rule.

RULE XLIV.

JEFFERSON'S MANUAL.

The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House and joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.

RULE XLV.

PRINTING.

(The rule as to printing is now regulated by the statute law.)

1. All documents referred to committees or otherwise disposed of shall be printed unless otherwise specially ordered.

2. Motions to print additional numbers of any bill, report, resolution, or other public document shall be referred to the Committee on Printing; and the report of the committee thereon shall be accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost thereof. Unless ordered by the House, no bill, resolution, or other proposition reported by a committee shall be reprinted unless the same be placed upon the calendar. Of bills which have passed the Senate, and of House bills as amended by the Senate, when referred in the House, there shall be printed 400 copies.

JEFFERSON'S MANUAL.

The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House and joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL,
Clerk of the House, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I desire to inform you that I have this day mailed to the governor of Iowa my resignation as a Member of the Sixty-second Congress, to take effect on the 15th day of March, 1911.

Respectfully, WALTER I. SMITH.

ASSIGNMENT OF ROOMS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 24.

Resolved, That the committee rooms in the House Office Building now assigned to and occupied by the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and the same are hereby, assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs; and the committee rooms now assigned to and occupied by the Committee on Military Affairs in the Capitol Building be, and the same are hereby, assigned to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, That the rooms 152 and 154 in the House Office Building, formerly occupied by the Ship Subsidy Committee, be, and they are hereby, assigned to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman that these rooms were reserved to enable special committees created from time to time to have some proper place with facilities to conduct their work, and if these rooms are assigned there will be no place in the House Office Building to accommodate such committees. I suggest that the entire question of the reassignment of rooms go over until some time when a committee can take the whole matter up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky to let his resolution go over.

Mr. HELM. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold the resolution.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—SAMUEL CUSTER.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. STERLING to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of Samuel Custer, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, April 5, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Doorkeeper of the House, transmitting a list of public property in his charge in committee rooms of the House (H. Doc. No. 1), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

JOHN H. BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. BACON, the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared, and,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate and the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and to inform him that the two Houses of Congress had assembled and were ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make, have attended to their duty, and in behalf of the Senate we beg leave to report that the President will communicate to Congress in writing at once.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

M. C. Latta, assistant secretary to the President of the United States, appeared, and said: Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received by the Secretary and handed to the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary [Henry M. Rose] read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmitted to the Sixty-first Congress on January 26 last the text of the reciprocal trade agreement which had been negotiated, under my direction, by the Secretary of State with the representatives of the Dominion of Canada. This agreement was the consummation of earnest efforts, extending over a period of nearly a year, on the part of both Governments to effect a trade arrangement which, supplementing as it did the amicable settlement of various questions of a diplomatic and political character that had been reached, would mutually promote commerce and would strengthen the friendly relations now existing.

The agreement in its intent and in its terms was purely economic and commercial. While the general subject was under discussion by the commissioners, I felt assured that the sentiment of the people of the United States was such that they would welcome a measure which would result in the increase of trade on both sides of the boundary line, would open up the reserve productive resources of Canada to the great mass of our own consumers on advantageous conditions, and at the same time offer a broader outlet for the excess products of our farms and many of our industries. Details regarding a negotiation of this kind necessarily could not be made public while the conferences were pending. When, however, the full text of the agreement, with the accompanying correspondence and data explaining both its purpose and its scope, became known to the people through the message transmitted to Congress, it was immediately apparent that the ripened fruits of the careful labors of the commissioners met with widespread approval. This approval has been strengthened by further consideration of the terms of the agreement in all their particulars. The volume of support which has developed shows that its broadly national scope is fully appreciated and is responsive to the popular will.

The House of Representatives of the Sixty-first Congress, after the full text of the arrangement with all the details in regard to the different provisions had been before it, as they were before the American people, passed a bill confirming the agreement as negotiated and as transmitted to Congress. This measure failed of action in the Senate.

In my transmitting message of the 26th of January I fully set forth the character of the agreement and emphasized its appropriateness and necessity as a response to the mutual needs of the people of the two countries as well as its common advantages. I now lay that message, and the reciprocal trade agreement as integrally part of the present message, before the Sixty-second Congress and again invite earnest attention to the considerations therein expressed.

I am constrained, in deference to popular sentiment and with a realizing sense of my duty to the great masses of our people whose welfare is involved, to urge upon your consideration early action on this agreement. In concluding the negotiations, the representatives of the two countries bound themselves to use their utmost efforts to bring about the tariff changes provided for in the agreement by concurrent legislation at Washington and Ottawa. I have felt it my duty, therefore, not to acquiesce in relegation of action until the opening of the Congress in December, but to use my constitutional prerogative and convoke the Sixty-second Congress in extra session in order that there shall be no break of continuity in considering and acting upon this most important subject.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 5, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message and accompanying paper (H. Doc. No. 2) will be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BATTLESHIPS FOR ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 3), which was read and, on motion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith the answer of the Secretary of State to the resolution passed by the Senate of the United States on February 27, 1911, relating to the construction and armament in this country of two battleships for the Argentine Republic.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 5, 1911.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned has the honor to make to the President the following report as responsive, in so far as compatible with the public interests, to the resolution passed by the Senate of the United States on February 27, 1911, which reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, copies of any written communications and report upon any verbal communications which may have passed between the State Department and any other department of the Government of the United States, or between the State Department and any department or representative of the Argentine Republic, and any other communications, written or verbal, which may have been issued or received by the State Department pertaining to the construction and armament in this country of two battleships for the Argentine Republic."

As to communications between the Department of State and any other department of the Government, such communication was practically confined to that with the Navy Department. Its object and effect was to obtain from the Navy Department, in furtherance of the placing of the Argentine orders for naval construction in the United States, all such facilities as might be found wholly compatible with the naval interests and policy of the United States, the Navy Department being the responsible and expert judge of this question. The purport and essence of such communication is entirely clear from this department's letter of April 13, 1909, which is included, with other papers, in the report submitted to the President under this date by the Secretary of the Navy.

Beyond its letter of April 13, 1909, just referred to, and some oral communications between officials of the two departments upon precisely the same lines, such communications were confined to the transmission to the Navy Department of confidential requests for information made by the Argentine Government or of questions touching upon naval technique which came before this department confidentially through the legation at Buenos Aires.

As to communications between the Department of State and the Government of the Argentine Republic, such communication, except as already referred to, consisted in the oral or written expression of the Department of State, chiefly through its legation at Buenos Aires, of everything that could properly be said with the view to furthering the placing of these orders in the United States, together with such replies as were received from the Argentine Government.

Such other communications as were made or received by the Department of State pertaining to the construction and armament in this country of two battleships for the Argentine Government consisted of a great volume of correspondence, chiefly with the legation at Buenos Aires and the embassy in London, and a correspondence with all American shipbuilders who were known to be interested or who it was thought might be interested in these contracts, this last correspondence having been carried on with a list of manufacturers supplied by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

At the beginning of the present administration, on August 5, 1909, the Congress appropriated $100,000 principally for the purpose of "defraying the necessary expenses incurred in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State under tariff legislation and otherwise." Thereupon the Department of State was promptly reorganized, the very purpose of this reorganization being to make it possible, among other things, for the Government of the United States to lend vital, cordial, and efficient support to all legitimate and beneficial American enterprises in foreign countries.

In the autumn of 1908 the Congress of the Argentine Republic appropriated for armaments the sum of £11,000,000, a part of which was to be expended in the construction of two battleships. The Department of State, upon receipt of a communication during the month of September, 1908, pointing out that American firms were keenly desirous of submitting bids for this naval construction, telegraphed instructions to the legation at Buenos Aires to use its friendly good offices to the end that such American firms might secure the same opportunity in the competition about to ensue as that accorded to firms of other nationalities. On February 10, 1909, the president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., on the eve of his departure for England, wrote to the Department of State that the Fore River company, among three other American firms, had been invited to submit designs and prices for the proposed Argentine warships and requested that this department cable the embassy at London regarding the good standing of the company for use before the Argentine naval commission, then sitting in London.

The call for tenders for the construction, for the Argentine Government, of the two largest battleships afloat, and the prompt coming forward of American manufacturers and shipbuilders, prepared to compete, afforded an immediate opportunity to test the ability of the department, as reorganized, to secure in a concrete case real equality of opportunity for American manufacturers in a foreign country.

It should be borne in mind that this was the first time that American shipbuilders and ordnance manufacturers had ventured into competition for a contract of this importance with the naval constructors of the world, who were favored in many cases by the prestige of long-established international commercial relations and experience. The representatives of American industry labored under the added disadvantage of isolation by the necessities of negotiation at London and in Buenos Aires, while their competitors enjoyed all the powerful aid incident to the presence of large colonies and great masses of invested capital of their respective nationalities in the foreign country concerned. To overcome these enormous advantages and to give the American builders a favorable opportunity to demonstrate their competency to meet all requirements in free competition entailed, naturally, an amount of discussion commensurate with the great innovation it was sought to bring about. Hence the telegraphic and written correspondence is voluminous.

The efforts of the Department of State were the more earnest by reason of the feeling that it was peculiarly appropriate that between American republics American manufacturers should have at least as favorable an opportunity as those of any other country.

The undersigned had the honor to report to the President, with peculiar gratification, the conclusion of the Argentine Republic to order these great battleships in the United States. The advantages to American labor, industry, and commerce are self-evident. The national advanage of naval construction within the United States, as vastly strengthening the efficiency of the manufacturers upon whom this Government would have to depend if ever requiring great supplies of war material, has been set forth by the Secretary of the Navy. The prestige of American industry is greatly benefited. This transaction has shown not only the high quality of an important branch of American manufacture but has proved the ability of American manufacturers to enter the lists against foreign competitors when given a fair opportunity, and when receiving from their own Government such support as it has been for years past the invariable practice of the governments of all really great commercial nations to give most energetically to their reputable producers. The Department of State has regarded the placing of these orders in the United States as a good augury for the commercial expansion of the future.

The commercial, industrial, and even political importance of such an international transaction is so great that the undersigned has thought it his duty to scrutinize with special care the question as to how far it is compatible with the national interests to make public the very extended correspondence involved, much of which possesses an inherent quality of reserve. The undersigned has sought to give what, with the report of the Secretary of the Navy, constitutes a clear indication of all that is essential in the trend of the correspondence in question. To go beyond this he does not deem to be compatible with the public interest. To publish correspondence affecting the Argentine Republic would do violence to that delicacy and to that courteous consideration called for by the amenities of international intercourse. To publish the ancillary correspondence with American manufacturers would be scarcely fair, serving merely, as to matters of their foreign business, to compel them to disclose details which might in some respects tend to paralyze their future efforts and to impose upon them relative disadvantages by making known facts unknown to their competitors in the foreign market. In reaching this conclusion and in submitting this report the undersigned has, however, the honor to assure the President that, beyond the necessary reserves imposed by the national interests upon the text of correspondence of the character in question, it is his conviction that the present report will be found to serve the purpose contemplated by the resolution of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted.

P. C. KNOX.

EXPENDITURES OF TARIFF BOARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 3), which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provision of the act approved August 5, 1909, making appropriation "to enable the President to secure information and to assist the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, as provided in section 2 of the tariff bill, relating to the maximum and minimum rates," I transmit herewith a detailed statement of all expenditures under this provision for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 5, 1911.

BATTLESHIPS FOR ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 27, 1911, certain information relative to the construction in this country of battleships for the Argentine Republic (S. Doc. No. 2), which, on motion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 30, 1911.

SIR: By direction of the President and in accordance with the Senate resolution of February 27, 1911, of which a copy is hereto attached, relative to the subject of information furnished by this department to American shipbuilders, which brought to this country a contract amounting to about $23,000,000 for the construction and armament of two battleships of 28,000 tons each for the Argentine Republic, and with particular reference to the various clauses thereof, I have the honor respectfully to submit the following:

"First. Copies of any and all orders which may have been issued by the Secretary of the Navy or his subordinates and of all communications received or sent by the Navy Department pertaining to the construction in private shipyards of two battleships for the account of the Argentine Republic."

There are transmitted herewith copies of the following:

(1) Letter of the State Department, dated April 13, 1909, asking the assistance of the Navy Department in carrying out the policy of the administration in regard to encouraging the building of battleships for foreign governments in this country.

(2) Confidential memorandum of March 11, 1910, inaugurating the department's policy with reference to giving assistance to private contractors in this country.

(3) Correspondence relative to the construction of torpedo tubes at the Washington Navy Yard.

(4) Letter to Admiral Garcia of April 5, 1910, informing him that the Argentine Naval Commission would be given all possible assistance in having their battleships constructed in this country, and that all information would be regarded as of a confidential nature.

(5) List showing information given to our contractors or to the Argentine Naval Commission.

(6) Instructions of April 4, 1910, relative to exchange of information in regard to the construction of the Argentine ships.

The correspondence to which this clause of the resolution refers is very voluminous, dating back several years. It is believed, however, that the above papers will furnish all necessary information.

"Second. What, if any, plans of guns, gun mounts, and other appliances pertaining to the armament of battleships the property of the Government of the United States in the custody of the Navy Department have been loaned, transmitted, or communicated to either the representatives of the Argentine Republic or to representatives of any shipbuilding company?"

The correspondence described in the foregoing paragraphs includes a list which gives the plans of guns, gun mounts, and other appliances pertaining to the armament of battleships that have been communicated to either the representatives of the Argentine Republic or the shipbuilding company. This list contains three of the general plans of battleships Nos. 34 and 35. The plan of the fire-control system has not yet been furnished, but it is the intention of the department to supply the necessary information for use in the installation of fire-control systems in these ships at the proper time. The question of the torpedo tubes and their construction at the Washington Navy Yard will be referred to later on. The list of books and specifications furnished the representatives of the Argentine Republic is submitted with the correspondence referred to above.

"Third. What, if any, of such plans cover devices which hitherto, through patents or secrecy, have been the exclusive property of the United States Government?"

No devices contained in the plans furnished are covered by patents the exclusive property of the United States. The question of holding certain plans or devices as secret is purely one of expediency, to be determined in view of all the circumstances of each particular case and depending much upon what military value may be assigned to their use. It is the usual practice for naval authorities of different countries to exchange information of this kind. It has therefore been deemed advisable to pursue this course in regard to the particular devices to which the Senate resolution refers.

"Fourth. What, if any, work has been done in the navy yard at Washington or elsewhere by any officials or employees of the Navy Department, civilian or otherwise, to aid in the construction of the two battleships being built in this country for the Argentine Republic?"

There is transmitted herewith correspondence relative to the manufacture of two torpedo tubes at the Washington Navy Yard. The plans of these were developed by the Bureau of Ordnance, and it has not been deemed advisable to make these plans public by giving out a contract for their construction by private manufacturers. These tubes could not be purchased from any private firm or contractor in this country without Government supervision, drawings, etc., and for this reason it was decided to permit their manufacture at the Washington Navy Yard. This procedure, furthermore, is in complete harmony with numerous precedents in this country and abroad where the facilities of the Government docks and shops are often available for the use of foreign men-of-war and for commercial firms and merchant vessels when Government business is not interfered with and when the Government is not brought into competition with private concerns.

"Fifth. If any such plans have been so divulged or if any such work has been performed by employees of the Navy Department, by whose authority has such action been taken and such work performed?"

The action above referred to in placing at the disposition of the contractors for the Argentine ships plans and technical devices of the department has been taken upon careful consideration and by authority of the Secretary of the Navy, in pursuance of the policy of the administration to endeavor in every proper way by seconding the efforts of American firms to procure for American shipyards and labor a participation in the construction of these vessels, as is outlined in the letter of the State Department dated April 13, 1909.

The American firms in competition for the Argentine contract soon learned that the quality of the material they were able to furnish was regarded as most excellent by the technical commission of the Argentine Government. Nevertheless, it was apparent that if the American competitors were to offer bids upon a footing of equality with their foreign rivals it was essential that they receive from their Government the same assistance and support as that which the great ordnance manufacturers of Europe obtained from their governments.

The correspondence shows the restrictions placed upon the furnishing of plans and information as to naval matters, and the arrangements made to secure such advantages as would naturally be derived from an access to the new features of naval construction which would be certain to be incorporated in the specifications of these new war vessels of a larger tonnage than had been heretofore placed in American shipyards.

It should be borne in mind that these ships represent the very latest advances at home and abroad in naval construction and equipment. The Argentine commission, previous to the awarding of the contract for the construction of the vessels in this country, had traveled extensively abroad inspecting many plans and devices submitted by European contractors. The result of this personal study has undoubtedly gone into the preparation and development of plans and devices for the vessels laid down in the United States and will now become available to the American Navy. Indeed, it is reasonable to assume that there is no modern improvement in naval warfare that will not be embodied in these ships. The value, therefore, that the interest of this Government must attach to the exchange of information of this character can not be too strongly emphasized.

Another consideration of the first importance which has had great weight with the department is that the construction and armament of foreign war vessels in the United States is of undoubted benefit to the country at large in view of the fact that a high development of the shipyards and ordnance factories of the United States constitutes an asset of military strength of inestimable value in time of war.

Respectfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER,
Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 13, 1909.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a translation of a note from the minister of the Argentine Republic, transmitting a list of publications desired by his Government, for use in comparing the bids of American shipbuilders for work for the Argentine Navy with other bids.

This department has already made efforts, through the legation at Buenos Aires, to get as large a portion of this work as possible for American shipyards, and will be very happy if you will facilitate a reply to the present request of the Argentine Government, in so far as such compliance is likely to increase the American shipbuilders' chances of success, and to such an extent and in such manner as may be deemed entirely consistent with the policy of your department. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

HUNTINGTON WILSON,
Acting Secretary.

[Inclosure No. 2.—Confidential memorandum.]

MARCH 11, 1910.

The following correspondence explains the inauguration of a policy which the department desires to follow concerning the cooperative assistance that may be rendered by officers to private contractors in this country in their contracts with foreign Governments:

BETHLEHEM STEEL WORKS,
South Bethlehem, Pa., May 12, 1909.

CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have recently returned from a visit of some weeks to London, where I went to endeavor to procure the order for the ordnance material of two battleships of the first class for the Argentine Government and some smaller vessels. I am satisfied that the Argentine Government believes that the material we are offering them is of excellent quality, and that the prices are below those current in Europe; but we carry a great load in the fact that European Governments interest themselves very actively in their makers of war material, and, so to speak, put the authority of the Governments behind these makers.

There were several American shipbuilding firms represented, but for the ordnance—the completed guns, ammunition, and armor—the Bethlehem Co. alone made a proposition. If the Bethlehem Co. had not been able to furnish designs for the ordnance material, the American firms could have made no proposition.

We made complete propositions for the ordnance material, with the important exceptions only that we offered no under water discharge tube for torpedoes and no completed design for the arrangements of fire control. We would like to have the bureau's assurance that we can obtain its designs for these two features of ordnance equipment. This would make us in all respects complete. The bureau will please understand that we have not as yet been specifically asked for these things; but we believe that we shall be in time, if the work comes to this country, and desire to be prepared beforehand. The specific thing that we would like to do at the present time is to write to our agent in London and tell him to wait upon the Argentine commission and inform them that the bureau will give us its design of these two features. I may add that it will be of assistance to us if the bureau will say that it will aid us so far as it can; but, as already stated, these two features referred to are the only ones in which our designs are defective and which we may be called upon to deliver. All the other designs and specifications are filed with the commission complete and have been gone over at great length and fully explained by our agents.

If the bureau should determine that our request can not be granted, we trust that some way can be devised whereby we can obtain some aid and warrant in the same nature as the great ordnance manufacturers of Europe obtain from their Governments. It goes without saying that any indorsement from our Government will be most valuable, and the advantage to our Government in helping us is also obvious. It will help to build up manufactories in which ordnance material can be procured rapidly when required.

Very respectfully,

BETHLEHEM STEEL CO.,
JOHN F. MEIGS.

[First indorsement.]

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, May 14, 1909.

Respectfully referred to the department.

The following recommendations are made with the approval of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, who has discussed the subject of this letter at the bureau in the presence of the author:

(a) It is believed to be in the best interests of the Government to encourage the private establishments of the country as far as practicable in obtaining foreign orders for the building of ships and the manufacture of war material, especially from those countries affected by the Monroe doctrine. It is thought that it would result in increasing our available resources in time of war or of threatened war, while adding material to our commercial prestige and prosperity.

(b) The specific designs requested are strictly confidential, and the bureau takes especial care to keep them from becoming public property. The bureau, however, recommends that this request be granted, provided an assurance be obtained that adequate precautions will be taken to insure that they will be used and treated as confidential by all those concerned in their use.

With respect to "Fire control," the Bureau of Ordnance has cognizance of the instruments only, the Bureau of Equipment plans and supplies the connections, and the Bureau of Construction and Repair makes the installations. Representatives of these bureaus confer in advance concerning the complete system, and constant experimentation and improvement is in progress.

(c) The bureau recommends, if permission be granted for the use of any of its designs, that the information be not furnished until after the signing of the contracts and after suitable agreements have been made that the confidential nature of the information will be preserved.

(d) The bureau respectfully suggests that if such transactions are approved by the department, it be distinctly understood that no firm is to be favored over any other with an established reputation in good standing.

(e) The bureau also respectfully recommends that proper safeguards be established to assure an understanding that this action will not favor one nation more than another.

(f) The bureau further recommends that all contracts for the building of warships in this country for a foreign government, in which assurances are given by the department for the use of its confidential information, require the contracting parties to agree that the United States will be given the first refusal in case of a contemplated sale and that the United States will have the right to purchase such vessels at any time before delivery in event of any emergency in which the purchase would be to its best interests.

There would be more likelihood of successful results and increased foreign orders to the private establishments if it were understood that the aid of the Navy Department would be given by consultation, advice, and recommendation concerning the plans; and the suitability of such ships for the purposes of the United States, in event of purchase, would be increased, if the bureau's ideas concerning standard dimensions of ordnance material and the plans of gun mounts were consulted. With these ends in view, the bureau would be pleased to lend its assistance to any extent considered by the department for the best interests of the Government. It is not thought that cooperation in his matter would be difficult, provided the remote possibility of sale to the United States were considered as the price of cooperation.

W. IRVING CHAMBERS,
Acting Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

[Second indorsement.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 21, 1909.

Returned to the Bureau of Ordnance.

The department desires the written assent of the Bethlehem Steel Co. to all of the Bureau of Ordnance recommendations, as set forth in the first indorsement herein, before making a final decision in the matter.

G. V. L. MEYER, Secretary.

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., May 21, 1909.

SIR: Referring to Bethlehem Steel Co.'s letter of May 12, 1909, to the Bureau of Ordnance, signed by Mr. John F. Meigs, requesting designs of ordnance material for submission to the Argentine Government, etc.:

The bureau forwards herewith copy of its first indorsement of May 14, 1909, referring said letter to the Navy Department, making certain specific recommendations.

The Secretary of the Navy has just informed the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance that in case the Bethlehem Steel Co. assent to all of the recommendations of the bureau, as set forth in the above-mentioned indorsement, and will agree to carry them out in case contracts are made with the Argentine Government, that in all probability the Navy Department would be willing to assist the company in the way they desire.

It is therefore requested that the company forward its assent to the Bureau of Ordnance at its early convenience.

Respectfully,

N. E. MASON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

BETHLEHEM STEEL CO.,
South Bethlehem, Pa., May 22, 1909.

CHIEF OF BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have received the bureau's 22745/4 (A) of May 21, referring to a request by this company under date of May 12 for certain designs of ordnance material, and beg to thank the bureau and the Secretary of the Navy very warmly for the decisions in this matter, which we are confident will give us great assistance in our representations to the Argentine Government in reference to the ships for which we are proposing to them.

We assent to all the engagements which the Bureau of Ordnance requires that we shall make in the premises, and will take every precaution that the designs and other information shall be strictly confidential, as respects people in our employ and all others to whom it may be necessary in any way to indicate any part of the information furnished us. We will also attend to the wishes of the bureau in respect to clauses e and f of paragraph 2 of the bureau's indorsement of May 14, which appear, together with the requirement of keeping the information confidential, to be the only undertakings that the bureau at this time suggests that we should enter into.

Respectfully,

A. JOHNSTON,
First Vice President.

[First indorsement.]

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, May 25, 1909.

Respectfully referred to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, together with a copy of Bureau of Ordnance letter of May 21, 1909, to the Bethlehem Steel Co.

This correspondence is to be considered in connection with bureau's first indorsement of May 14, 1909, on letter from the Bethlehem Steel Co., dated May 12, 1909, to the Bureau of Ordnance, requesting designs of ordnance material for submission to the Argentine Government, etc.

As will be seen within, the Bethlehem Steel Co. assents to all of the recommendations of the bureau, as set forth in the above-mentioned indorsement, and will agree to carry them out in case contracts are made with the Argentine Government.

N. E. MASON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

[Second indorsement.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 29, 1909.

Returned to the Bureau of Ordnance.

The department accepts the assent of the Bethlehem Steel Co. to all the engagements which the Bureau of Ordnance requires, as set forth in the copy of Bureau of Ordnance first indorsement of May 14, 1909, herein, and is willing to assist the company in the way they desire, as far as lies within its power.

FORE RIVER SHIPBUILDING CO.,
Quincy, Mass., March 30, 1910.

SIR: We shall be obliged if you would inform us if you could undertake to manufacture on our account, and under what conditions, the submerged torpedo apparatus, in whole or in part, for the battleship, our hull No. 187, building for the Argentine Government at these works.

We are inclosing for your information the preliminary specifications for the torpedoes, torpedo tubes, air compressors, and accumulators, and would prefer, if you can undertake it, that you should supply the whole apparatus complete. An early reply will greatly oblige,

Yours, respectfully,

FORE RIVER SHIPBUILDING CO.,
By F. T. BOWLES, President.

CHIEF OF BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

[First indorsement.]

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, April 4, 1910.

Respectfully forwarded to the Navy Department.

This bureau can, with the approval of the Navy Department, undertake the manufacture, at the navy yard, Washington, D. C., of two broadside, under-water, side-loading torpedo tubes, one port and one starboard, after the drawings and plans of the type of tube now used in the United States naval service, the commandant certifying, in accordance with article 926, paragraph 3, United States Navy Regulations, that these articles can not be purchased from private firms or contractors.

Air compressors, air separators, air accumulators, torpedoes, and gyroscope testing tables are procured by this bureau by contract with private firms, but this bureau can, with the approval of the department, furnish the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. with the specifications under which these articles are furnished.

N. E. MASON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

[Second indorsement.]

APRIL 6, 1910.

Respectfully returned to the Bureau of Ordnance.

The department approves the recommendation contained in the preceding indorsement that the two submerged torpedo tubes be manufactured at the Washington Navy Yard, and that the specifications for such articles of the torpedo outfit as are procured from private firms be also furnished the Fore River company to assist that company in placing orders with private firms for the rest of the outfit.

WINTHROP,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

[Third indorsement.]

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
April 8, 1910.

Respectfully forwarded to the commandant, navy yard, Washington, D. C., and Superintendent Naval Gun Factory, calling attention to previous indorsements.

The bureau, if possible, desires to undertake the manufacture of the submerged-tube outfit and such parts connected therewith as can not ordinarily be purchased from private firms or contractors.

Comments and suggestions are requested concerning "under what conditions these submerged tubes can be manufactured for the Fore River Shipbuilding Co.," the probable limit of cost, the times of delivery, and the method of payment for the work desired by the navy yard.

The torpedoes, air compressors, accumulators, and other parts of the outfit ordinarily contracted for by the bureau will not be furnished by the Government.

Please return as soon as possible.

N. E. MASON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

[Fourth indorsement.]

UNITED STATES NAVY YARD,
Washington, D. C., April 19, 1910.

Respectfully returned to the Bureau of Ordnance.

The following is an estimate of the cost for two 5m x 21", submerged torpedo tubes, Mark 1:

	Labor.	Material.
2 tubes	$12,110.42	$9,021.58
Jigs, tools, etc	4,289.59	18.42
2 Mark VIII, model 2, firing locks, to be taken from store	.....	341.70
2 solenoids for Mark VIII, model 2, firing locks	60.00	6.00
Spare parts and tools as per sketches No. 3351 and No. 3352 (copies of which are forwarded herewith)	260.52	176.40
Total	16,720.53	9,564.10
Shop expense	5,434.17	2,090.06
Total	22,154.70	11,654.16
		22,154.70
Total	.....	33,808.86
Add 12 per cent of whole labor for leave and holiday	.....	2,658.56
Grand total	.....	36,467.42

To build these two tubes and the two tubes referred to in Naval Gun Factory second indorsement of this date, in reply to bureau's first indorsement of April 12, 1910, it will require about nine months after receipt of order. The first two tubes would be completed in six months after receipt of order.

It is considered advisable to change the design of mouthpiece of these tubes to allow more clearance for the tail of the torpedoes when torpedoes are fired at speeds greater than 18 knots, so that the Argentine battleships will not be subjected to the same serious defects at high speeds as recently encountered by the U. S. S. Chester.

The method of payment for this work should be in accordance with the existing regulations and deposit for the amount involved to be made with the paymaster of the yard through the commandant. As the whole amount is rather large and the expenditures will run over a considerable period of time, it would seem equitable to allow several deposits on account to be made. One-third of the amount should be deposited before work is begun and the balance in suitable installments promptly to meet the requirements of our pay rolls, when request is made by the commandant or paymaster of the yard.

It will be noted in the above estimates that there is no charge provided for the use of the Government drawings, patterns, etc., thus far completed and used for its own manufactures. The privilege of the use of these is of considerable value, as they cost the Government much time and money to develop. I would, however, leave this to the bureau to estimate how much, if any, charge shall be made.

These torpedo tubes can not be purchased from private firms or contractors, nor could they be built by such without Government supervision, drawings, etc.

F. C. BEATTY,
Captain, United States Navy,
Commandant and Superintendent Naval Gun Factory.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 5, 1910.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 2, 1910, in regard to the assistance to be rendered by the Navy Department in the construction of the battleships to be built in this country for the Republic of Argentine, and note your assurance that information furnished you will be regarded as of a confidential nature, which assurance, as set forth by you, is quite satisfactory to the department.

Instructions have been sent by the department to its inspectors at the shipyards where these ships are to be built to furnish all necessary information in their power, and where such information must come from one of the bureaus of the department, it will be furnished through the appropriate inspector. This will render it unnecessary for the officers of your commission to visit the bureaus of the department.

The department would prefer not to issue any general authorization for your officers to visit the latest ships of the United States Navy, whether in commission or under construction, with a view to inspection of details, but in any special case would be glad to consider a special request from you, and to decide such case in accordance with the circumstances attending it.

The plans, specifications, etc., referred to in the department's letter of March 25 will also be furnished through the local inspectors.

The department would be pleased to receive from you a list of the members of your commission, showing the special duty of each, together with a permanent address to which your mail can be sent.

Very respectfully,

G. v. L. MEYER,
Secretary of the Navy.

[Memorandum for the Bureau of Ordnance, the Bureau of Construction and Repair, the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and the Bureau of Equipment.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 4, 1910.

Referring to the confidential memorandum dated March 24, 1910, concerning certain information to be furnished to the Fore River company, for delivery in confidence to the Argentine commission, you will please furnish to the department a list of all such information forwarded, if you have not already done so.

You will also inform the local inspectors of the cooperative policy of the department with respect to the assistance it is disposed to render to private firms in the execution of this contract with the Argentine Government, and you will issue instructions to the local inspectors to keep in touch with the work and furnish the bureau, confidentially, with details of any work involving innovations or departures from United States practice that may be made, and the bureau will furnish copies of these details as they are received to the department for the information of all bureaus concerned and for file with the Office of Naval Intelligence.

The memorandum dated March 24 was ordered to avoid delay in the commencement of the work, but hereafter, when the contractor or a subcontractor desires to use a plan, method, or detail originated or developed as part of the special work of the Navy Department or its bureaus, he should notify, by letter, the local inspector, under whose cognizance the work would come, of the plans or methods he intends to use. The inspector should immediately forward the correspondence, with any comment necessary by him, to the bureau for transmission to the department for action.

G. v. L. MEYER, Secretary of the Navy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., as follows:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we invoke Thy blessing upon the new Congress now convened. Impress, we beseech Thee, each Member of this House with the great responsibility resting upon him, that with high ideals of statesmanship he may give the best that is in him to his country. Let Thy blessing descend upon the Speaker, that with clear perceptions, noble endeavors, and lofty purposes he may preside over the deliberations of this House with justice and equity and lead on to the highest results. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed under a resolution of the House to wait upon the President reports that in conjunction with a similar committee of the Senate it has performed its duty, that the President desires it to present his friendly greetings to Congress and to say that he will without delay communicate further in writing.

THE RULES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 30.

Resolved, That the House shall proceed to consider the pending House resolution providing rules for the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress under the following terms, to wit:

First. At the conclusion of the first reading of the resolution it shall be in order to offer one substitue for the resolution of the gentleman from Texas.

Second. There shall be four hours' general debate, the time to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the resolution, the time to be controlled on one side by Mr. HENRY of Texas and on the other by Mr. MANN, of Illinois.

Third. At the conclusion of the general debate as herein provided, a vote shall be taken without delay or intervening motion—first, on the question of adopting the substitute, if any, and then on the question of adopting the resolution of the gentleman from Texas or the substitute resolution, as the case may be.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield for a question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman if he will not consent to permit amendments to be offered by any Member? It seems hardly fair that it should be confined to one motion to offer a substitute. There are many Members here, who in the best of faith desire to offer some amendments, who would like the privilege of doing so.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will understand that I am presenting this as a party measure, as a caucus action, and there is an opportunity for a substitute. The gentleman can embody his amendments in any substitute that may be proper. These rules are being presented as a party measure, as I say. There will be four hours of general debate. There is an opportunity given to offer a substitute, and the gentleman's party can offer a substitute with any modifications of the rules as heretofore obtained as they see proper, and there will be ample opportunity to present their side of the question just as we are presenting ours.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will yield for a question or for a suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. It is in the nature of a suggestion. I could not confine it to a question. There are a good many of us who believe that the adoption of rules is not a party question, and who desire to take no party advantage whatever on the question of rules, but who would like an opportunity of presenting amendments that would perhaps not be contained in the substitute which would be offered. I will say, frankly, to the gentleman that I do not know what the substitute is going to be. If it were the old rules of the House, I would prefer the rules that the gentleman has reported, but still I would like an opportunity, and there are many others like me here, to offer some amendments even to those rules. It would be of little advantage to us if we had a right to debate it and have no right to vote on any of the amendments that might be offered.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let me suggest to the gentleman that all these questions of which he speaks can be considered later in the House and by the Committee on Rules. The gentleman's party will undoubtedly offer a substitute and possibly may embrace the propositions suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, I think not; I am satisfied from past experience it will not embrace some propositions that I want to offer. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman willing first to concede some debate on the adoption of the rule?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. You mean on this resolution?

Mr. MANN. On the adoption of this rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly I am.

Mr. MANN. So that the gentleman will withhold his motion for the previous question and possibly agree upon some time for debate.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. Now, may——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let me say to the gentleman I am perfectly willing to have 20 minutes on a side on this question, and that at the end the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. Now, let me make this further inquiry in the way of a suggestion, and that is whether the gentlemen on that side of the House would not be willing to proceed to-day to general debate on the resolution in reference to the rules and then to-morrow give opportunity to offer amendments to the rules? I suggest to the gentleman I do not understand that the caucus on that side of the House has decided that there might be no amendments offered. I understand that the caucus, naturally, on that side of the House would resist any amendments unless we can present some amendments which I think will appeal to the gentleman himself.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Well, if the gentleman can do that, suppose we go ahead with the adoption of this resolution and later, then, perhaps you might persuade us.

Mr. NORRIS. But the adoption of this resolution, let me suggest to the gentleman, would preclude that.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We can adopt this, and then we will come to the other——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has authority at any time to move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. Why would not the gentleman be willing to proceed——

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I only yielded to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. And I was trying to ask a question.

Mr. McCALL. I simply wanted to make a parliamentary inquiry, and that was if it was not in order to read the message of the President, which has just been received?

The SPEAKER. Why, the Chair thought that would be done.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. As soon as we settle this question I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentlemen on that side of the House be willing to proceed with general debate for the four hours first, as they will have the right to move the previous question, so that they will not now foreclose any opportunity for amendments if amendments be presented to which they might agree?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will state to the gentleman candidly I would rather proceed in this way and allow 20 minutes of debate on each side on this resolution, and then we can come to the other question.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CUSTOMS LAWS.

The SPEAKER. Without prejudice to the position of the gentleman from Texas, the Chair lays before the House the following message (H. Doc. No. 3) from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The message was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909, making appropriation "to enable the President to secure information and to assist the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, as provided in section 2 of the tariff bill, relating to the maximum and minimum rates," I transmit herewith a detailed statement of all expenditures under this provision for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 5, 1911.

CANADIAN RECIPROCITY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House the following message (H. Doc. No. 2) from the President of the United States.

The message was read, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

[For message see proceedings of the Senate for this day.]

THE RULES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for the suggestion he was about to make.

Mr. MANN. The inquiry I made of the gentleman was whether he would not be willing on that side to proceed with the general debate on the rules for four hours, and at the end of that time determine whether that side of the House would not give to this side of the House opportunity to offer amendments?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Let us first get this resolution out of the way.

Mr. MANN. That gets the whole thing out of the way.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And if the gentleman desires 20 minutes on this resolution I am perfectly willing to concede it.

Mr. KENDALL rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL]?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman for a question; yes.

Mr. KENDALL. What I want to know is this: Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Texas to submit these rules as printed to the House, with no alternative to amend except by a substitute en bloc?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is.

Mr. WEEKS. I would like to make an inquiry.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman for the inquiry.

Mr. WEEKS. At the convening of the Fifty-ninth Congress the leader of the minority made an eloquent appeal supporting a motion which he made that the rules of the last Congress be adopted tentatively for 30 days and then have them taken up for consideration——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I desire to say that is hardly an inquiry. It seems to be a speech.

Mr. WEEKS. It is not a speech. He made a motion to that effect, and based that motion on the fact largely that the new Members——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I decline to yield further. That seems to be a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] declines to yield.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman, however, for a question.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman stated this resolution was a party measure, and therefore thought it proper. I wish to ask if the gentleman's position is that, upon party measures, reasonable opportunity to offer amendments on the floor shall be denied to Members?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I desire to say to the gentleman that he limits my words too strictly. It is hardly a party measure, but a caucus action, and these rules have been made so good that I think the gentleman will find no difficulty in voting for them as proposed by this side of the House.

I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman was going to yield some time first.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will agree that we shall have 20 minutes on a side for debate, by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] moves the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas have permission, without yielding the floor, to yield to me 20 minutes. That gives him the authority.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, by permission of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] I make this suggestion, namely, that by unanimous consent we agree to 20 minutes' debate on a side on the resolution of the gentleman from Texas, and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and the vote taken.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That was my proposition to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] again state his request?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The request is that the House have 40 minutes' debate, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], and that at the end of the 40 minutes, without intervening motion, the House shall proceed to vote on the resolution of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the House have 40 minutes' debate, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and then that the previous question shall be considered ordered without intervening motion.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, does that mean, then, that there is to be no further debate on the question of the adoption of these rules?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. The resolution provides for the rules.

The SPEAKER. Unless there is objection——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object, because I think there ought to be a roll call on the motion for the previous question in this instance.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. You can have it when we get to that, if you desire it.

I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question. Those in favor of it will say "aye;" those opposed will say "no." The ayes seem to have it——

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 138, answered "present" 1, not voting 44, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BELL of Georgia with Mr. AMES.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. BATES.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. LINDSAY with Mr. PROUTY.

Mr. MCHENRY with Mr. VREELAND.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey with Mr. LOUDENSLAGER.

Mr. FOWLER with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee with Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SAUNDERS with Mr. HOWELL.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey, Mr. WICKLIFFE, Mr. HOLLAND, and Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland appeared before the Speaker's desk and asked to be recorded.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that these gentlemen do not bring themselves within the rules and practice of the House of Representatives, in that they are generally required to state that they were present and listening and did not hear their names called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will attend to that.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I just came in when my name was called and had no opportunity to answer.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman hear his name called?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. No; but a gentleman told me it was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to vote.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded as voting "yea" on this proposition. I was paired with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER]. I desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, pending that, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I understood that 20 minutes on a side for debate was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That was offered to our friends on that side, but was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Then I was in error.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] objected.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was only offered on condition that the previous question be agreed to without a roll call.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 200, nays 135, answered "present" 1, not voting 52, as follows:

YEAS—200.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. COVINGTON with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. BRANTLEY with Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota.

Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.

Mr. KORBLY with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. THISTLEWOOD.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. SELLS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded as voting no.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to change his vote?

Mr. SELLS. No; I want to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the House listening for his name?

Mr. SELLS. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, 19 years ago a distinguished gentleman, several times Speaker, said on the floor of the House of Representatives:

> I have been 15 years in Congress and I never saw a Speaker's decision overruled, and you will never live to see it, either.

That language was uttered by Thomas B. Reed, of Maine. His prophetic vision, in the light of recent history, does not seem to have been entirely correct. Since that time the country has seen the decisions of Speakers overruled on several occasions. It is but fair to say that perhaps some of the reasons which impelled the House to thus act did not come entirely from a defect in the rules themselves, but from the abusive administration of their provisions.

The country inquired the reason for these things. They considered it and have entered their decree, and the Democratic Party is here to-day for the purpose of keeping its plighted faith and restoring this body to its ancient functions as the representative body of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I assume that the gentlemen do not intend to offer a substitute under the provisions of the special order. But I pause to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether he proposes to offer a substitute under the terms of the special order just adopted?

Mr. MANN. What are the terms of the special order?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order again.

The Clerk again read the special order.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to yield the floor now for me to offer the substitute?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not desire to yield right here unless the reading of the resolution is to be waived, as agreed by us yesterday, having already been printed in the RECORD in parallel columns for the information of Members.

Mr. MANN. There is no objection to waiving the first reading of the resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then there is no objection to the gentleman from Illinois offering his substitute at the present time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-first Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives for the first or extra session only of the Sixty-second Congress, including the standing orders of March 8 and March 14, 1900 (relating to consideration of pension and claims bills on Friday), which are continued in force during said first session, with the following amendments to said rules of said Sixty-first Congress:

First. That the Speaker be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint the following standing committees and no others (unless he is hereafter specially authorized to appoint other committees by resolution of the House), viz:

The Committee on Ways and Means, on Printing, on Accounts, on Mileage, and on Enrolled Bills.

Second. That section 4 of Rule X be amended to read as follows:

"There shall be a Committee on Rules, to consist of 15 members, who shall be elected by the Members of the House, said committee to elect its own chairman, which committee, when so elected, shall have all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon the Committee on Rules by the rules of the House, and in addition to the powers so conferred upon it, it is hereby authorized and directed to revise, amend, simplify, and codify the rules of procedure of the House and report its conclusions to the House of Representatives on the first Monday in December, 1911, which report shall be of the highest privilege and remain so until disposed of by the House. Said committee shall have authority to sit during the session of Congress and in recess, to send for persons and papers, and to take testimony either before the full committee or any subcommittee thereof; that the necessary and actual expenses incurred in carrying out the purpose of this resolution shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House: Provided, That said Committee on Rules shall continue to act until said report shall be acted upon by the House."

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman from Texas will pardon the interruption——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The resolution that I have offered as a substitute is the same resolution that was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] two years ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And which the gentleman from Illinois voted against at the time.

Mr. MANN. And I may do so again; I do not know.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I felt sure that the gentleman from Illinois would make that statement. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Chair to notify me when I have proceeded 15 minutes. How much time have I already occupied?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied four minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. When I have occupied 20 minutes in all I will ask the Chair to notify me. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to proceed, I will state in a brief way the changes made in the rules and undertake to explain what is proposed in the present code presented by the Committee on Rules.

The first amendment is to Rule X. We here provide for the election of all standing committees. Heretofore those standing committees have been appointed by the Speaker, until otherwise ordered; but we are now meeting the expectations of the American people and conforming to our own judgment, taking that power away from the Speaker of this House, as we promised to do. Therefore, no longer is the Speaker of the House authorized to appoint standing committees, but hereafter during this Congress, and as long as subsequent Congresses may prefer to follow the precedent, you have the right to elect your committees.

We have abolished six of the useless committees, to wit: The Committees on Manufactures, Militia, Private Land Claims, Pacific Railroads, Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, and Ventilation and Acoustics. We also provide for the election of the chairmen of all standing committees and filling vacancies therein by election in this House. We have changed the clause of the old rules in reference to the Committee on Rules and provided that hereafter such committee shall consist of 11 members, of which the Speaker shall not be a member.

The next change is in Rule XI. We have made the necessary changes in order to harmonize it with the amendments of Rule X.

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is for a very brief question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I must decline to yield until the completion of my statement, and then if I have time will endeavor to answer the question.

The next change is in Rule XIII. There we have provided for the requisite number of calendars of business, and placed under the appropriate heads in this rule the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees, and also provide for the daily printing of calendars. We have also perfected the unanimous-consent rule in order that a Member may have a second opportunity to place his request upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and then if that request is denied by objection, after placing it there at his own pleasure, it must go off the calendar and not be again placed thereon.

To Rule XXI we have added what is known as the retrenchment amendment. Some call it the Holman amendment. Mr. Speaker, let me say in passing that if there is any one subject needing attention in this country it is the one appropriating the people's money. Extravagance with the money of the people in the Treasury of the United States is eating into the very vitals of this Republic! Hence we have so amended this rule as to make it possible to cut down appropriations and save millions of public money every year. [Applause.]

We have added an entirely new provision to Rule XXI in reference to revenue bills, and it is perhaps fair that I call attention to the exact verbiage of that provision at this time. That new clause reads:

No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I can not yield now. If I have time after concluding my statement, it will give me pleasure to do so.

Rule XXIV, clause 6, adds an entirely new proposition. It takes the standing orders in regard to pension bills and claim bills and incorporates them in one rule. They will hereafter be known as a part of Rule XXIV. This rule is also changed and rearranges the order of business, and puts it in such form that there is logical sequence.

Rule XXVII, known as the "Calendar of Motion to Discharge," has been materially changed. It is one of the new rules forced from the Republican majority last Congress against their will, and we have largely improved it. It is so important to the House and the country that I may be pardoned for giving a brief analysis of that rule as formulated by its present wording. First, the Calendar of Motion to Discharge is established. It provides that a bill must have been in the appropriate committee for 15 days before the discharge motion can be filed. Next, the calendar is named and called specifically a "Calendar of Motion to Discharge Committees." Again, the motion to discharge must have been entered for 7 days on the motion calendar prior to its being called up. Recognitions must be in the order in which they are filed. Again, a very important change is that a bill shall be read by title only when called up, and the title must contain not over 100 words.

After reading the title, the bill can not be submitted to the House unless a majority, by tellers, so determines. If a second, by tellers, fails, then the motion must go off the calendar and can not be restored. If a second is ordered, debate is limited to 20 minutes, 10 minutes to each side. The motion has precedence over motions to suspend the rules, and must be ordered at this juncture by a majority vote of the House membership. If it prevails, then the bill must be taken from the consideration of the committee and placed upon the proper calendar to which it belongs. And upon the calling of such committee the bill may be called up prior to any bill reported from the same committee subsequent to the discharge of the same. No Member can have on such calendar exceeding two bills at any one time. This is an entirely new provision of the rule. We found it convenient to drop Rule XXVI in rearranging and renumbering certain rules, and that has been done. Whatever was deemed necessary for retention in the rule has been preserved. We changed Rule XXXIII by allowing the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands the privileges of the floor. We slightly changed the verbiage of Rule XXXIV in regard to the Press Gallery, and by specific language have set apart a certain portion thereof for the benefit of the reporters and correspondents. The committee saw proper to abrogate the rule in regard to printing, because that matter is covered by general law.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman perfectly confident about that? That is not a partisan matter in any sense. I have not been able to discover myself any provision of law which provides for the printing as a document of matter referred by a Speaker to a committee. I think there is no such provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Texas will permit.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that a lot of printing formerly done under orders and rules was done under authority of acts which have been adopted from time to time. The only part of the rule there might be any question about is the first clause, providing that all documents disposed of by reference to committees and otherwise shall be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House except to make this suggestion so gentlemen may look into this. I went over the matter myself, and then I requested the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS] to go over the matter, and neither of us were able to find or did find—I will not say we were not able to find—any provision which would authorize the printing of documents referred from the Speaker's table to a committee, and there may be some question as to whether there would be any authority to print a bill which had been reported or passed.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We can arrange all that by a standing order, and I will say to the House that we conferred with those in charge of the document room and those connected with the Committee on Accounts and others dealing with public printing and they all informed us that the rule is practically obsolete and unnecessary, and therefore we struck it from the provisions of the rules.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other amendments not necessary to discuss at this time and these have been laid before the House in this brief statement, the chief changes, the material alterations, and we are ready to submit the rules to the judgment of the House and country. The minor changes can be taken up and considered as we proceed.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. How much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if there is any amendment to the old rules or a provision in the proposed rules that will prevent the use of calendar Wednesday by one committee for more than two days? Is there any change of that kind made in the rules?

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do.

Mr. GARRETT. There is not, and it is not necessary, because it is always within the power of the House to prevent that by the question of consideration being raised.

Mr. MADISON. The gentleman remembers that while we had that same power during the last session of Congress, yet every calendar Wednesday was taken up by one bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will answer the gentleman by saying that we have preserved calendar Wednesday, and are sure the Speaker of the House will see that it is wisely administered. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question on that particular proposition?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is no provision, as I read it, in the proposed new rule that will permit the Committee of the Whole, on calendar Wednesday, to limit debate or to prevent anyone speaking in general debate on a bill in the Committee of the Whole on calendar Wednesday about things ulterior and having no connection with the bill under discussion. I want to ask the gentlemen if they considered the proposition of changing that so that calendar Wednesday could not be frittered away as it has been several times before?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We did, and we considered that we could proceed with perfect order and utilize calendar Wednesday as it is in the rule. We think that is covered by the general rules of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. Several times there was general debate on some unimportant bill on calendar Wednesday taking place and consuming the entire day on subjects entirely different and not connected with the bill under debate. I think that has occurred.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We think we went as far as we should have gone at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman the purpose of the amendment to paragraph 2 of Rule XI, with regard to the reference of bills to the Committee on Ways and Means. There is the additional language:

Such measures as purport to raise revenue.

What is the purpose of that?

Mr. GARRETT. May I be permitted to say to the gentleman that there are some who hold to the belief that protective tariff bills, laid purely for protection, are not revenue bills and are not constitutional bills. This is the restoration of the language of an old Democratic rule.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it desired to limit the functions of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. GARRETT. Not in the least, nor will this do it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. This will liberalize their functions when they are legislating in behalf of the people.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota and Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As to Rule XXIV, paragraph 6, I would like the gentleman to tell the House how a bill on the Private Calendar, reported from some committee other than the committees named in the paragraph, can be considered.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We will discuss that when we get to it seriatim. I can not yield any further.

Permit me to say, in conclusion, that we have so amended these rules as to confer on every Member his privileges under the Constitution of the United States to legislate in behalf of his constituents, and if this body is not a deliberative forum, as intended by its founders, the Committee on Rules, in so far as they are concerned, will be willing and prompt to hear suggestions and write the rules as they should be, in accordance with principles of wisdom and right. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to paragraph 2 in Rule XXI, which is known as the Holman rule. Has the gentleman got the paragraph before him?

Mr. MANN. He has it in his head.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We are going to get to that and discuss it presently.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, that rule states what classes of amendments and what classes of provisions shall be in order on general appropriation bills. The rule states that new legislation shall be in order, provided it retrenches expenditures and is germane.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend until I can make an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois? Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts from his time?

Mr. MANN. I yield one minute, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman desires more time, I will yield to him two minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It will take several minutes to discuss this question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] just stated that he would consider these various items seriatim when he reached them. May I ask the gentleman from Texas when that will be? Will it be to-day, or will it be after the rules are adopted?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. No. I meant to say that there would be Members of the House who would take up the various features of the rules and discuss them.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I would like three minutes in which to raise this question now.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman prefer to wait until the gentlemen who are to discuss that rule have discussed it?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think it would be well to discuss it now, because I think it is a matter which ought to be looked into.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeds, I would like to suggest to Members that they will aid the Chair very much in keeping order if they will observe the rule that they address the Chair first when they want to interrupt a Member who has the floor. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Texas will find that on line 6, paragraph 2, Rule XXI, page 22, there is a provision quoted verbatim from the old Holman rule—

Nor shall any such provision in any such bill or amendment thereto be in order—

unless certain requirements are met. Now, does that word "provision" qualify the word "bill" and the word "amendment," both, or does it only qualify the word "bill"? It is a very important question.

Mr. MANN. There being no answer forthcoming——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am willing to give an answer. Giving my individual judgment, I think it would qualify the bill and amendment, both. The Speaker can place his construction on it. I have not the right to construe the language for him, but the language can speak for itself.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The reason I raise this question is because in the past this provision caused very much confusion. The House before voting ought to know what it means.

If the gentlemen will look up Crutchfield's Digest, which was prepared by order of the Congress that adopted these rules, he will find that in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress a situation arose in which Mr. Buchanan, of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, held an amendment in order in direct opposition to the views just expressed by the gentleman from Texas. The Post Office bill appropriated $450,000 for rural free delivery. An amendment was offered reducing that amount to $449,000, and providing likewise that no rural routes should be established except under specified methods. Now, it is true that that amendment reduced the appropriation, but the all-important part of the amendment introduced changes in existing law which had nothing to do with retrenchment. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole held that under the reading of that rule, although the amendment might produce changes in the existing law not contemplated by the spirit of the Holman rule, yet merely because one part of the amendment nominally reduced the appropriation, therefore the whole must be held in order, even though the important clause in no way related to retrenchment. Mr. Crutchfield, the Democratic parliamentarian, suggests possible modifications, so that the rule may be made clearer. Mr. Buchanan's decision and later decisions of like tenor have given this rule just the opposite construction to that which the gentleman from Texas has just given us.

I call the attention of this House to the fact that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] says that the Speaker or the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will decide this matter. I will try to point out that any Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, unless guided by the interpretation which the gentleman from Texas has just given, would be constrained to construe the rule according to the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Mr. Buchanan, of Virginia, and the similar rulings of his successors. But inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Rules has given us his interpretation——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I regret that I can not yield. I say, inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Rules has given to the House his present interpretation of that clause, this fact would seem to be worthy of weight as an opinion overruling the decision rendered by the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. MANN. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, at the commencement of our business to-day the Speaker said that no more important business was ever presented to a House than the consideration and adoption of its rules. I venture to say that never in the history of the American Congress has any House heretofore attempted to adopt a code of rules without giving to every Member of the House an opportunity to offer an amendment to those rules.

This is not the adoption of a code of rules by a party that has been in power for a number of years, as the Republican Party has, but it is the adoption of a new code of rules by a party new to power. It is substantially, in all respects, a revision of the House rules.

Heretofore on several occasions there have been important revisions of the rules. The rules were revised in 1880 upon a report from the Committee on Rules, which at that time consisted of several very distinguished men, Mr. Randall of Pennsylvania, Mr. Stephens of Georgia, Mr. Blackburn of Kentucky, Mr. Garfield of Ohio, and Mr. FRYE of Maine. Those rules were carefully considered by that committee of distinguished men, who represented both the majority and minority parties, and when presented to the House were accompanied by a written report. There is no written report accompanying this code of rules. Week after week was spent in deliberating upon those rules in 1880, and opportunity was afforded to every Member of that House to present such amendments as he saw fit to present, to any and every one of those rules.

The rules were revised again in 1890, and the Committee on Rules at that time was made up of men whose names are distinguished in our history. It consisted of Thomas B. Reed, William McKinley, JOSEPH G. CANNON, John G. Carlisle, and Roger Q. Mills. Those rules were carefully deliberated upon, and after long consideration by the committee were presented to the House, accompanied by a written report. Then they were debated day in and day out, and every Member of the House of Representatives at that time was afforded an opportunity to offer amendments to the rules. It was recognized then that every man on either side of the House, whatever might be his political faith, had an interest in the establishment of wise rules for the government of the House of Representatives.

There was another revision of the rules in the Fifty-second Congress, when the Democratic Party came into power. The chairman of the Committee on Rules at that time was the Speaker, Mr. Crisp. Mr. Outhwaite, of Ohio, was on the committee; Mr. Catchings, of Mississippi, was on the committee, all distinguished men in our parliamentary history; and on that occasion the rules were considered and deliberated upon over a great length of time by the committee and presented to the House, accompanied by a written report. A resolution was adopted that the rules should be read seriatim and due opportunity given to every Member of the House to consider the rules and to offer amendments.

So that on every occasion heretofore when there has been a revision of the rules an opportunity has been afforded to Members of the House to offer amendments, to debate, and consider and come to a conclusion as to what should be proper rules for the government of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman recall what was done in the Fifty-fourth Congress with reference to the adoption of the rules? I think we had three days of consideration then.

Mr. DALZELL. I recall very distinctly what was done in the Fifty-fourth Congress. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Rules, with Mr. Henderson, subsequently Speaker, and on that occasion, as to every single rule in the code of rules, an opportunity was offered for amendment. I do not recall whether we had any lengthy general debate, but general debate on the rules amounts to nothing. Why should you have general debate if you can not offer an amendment? Why theorize about what might be if we know that it can not be?

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. POU. I would like the gentleman to tell us when it was from that day down to this that the minority have had an opportunity to offer amendments to the various paragraphs of the rules of the House, or even so much as an opportunity to offer a substitute? We have had the gag put on us every time at the opening of every Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, you gentlemen seem to have learned how to do it pretty well. [Laughter.] I have drawn a distinction between the adoption of the rules by a party that has been continuously in power and has been acting under rules that it originally adopted after consideration by both sides of the House and a party that has just come into power and proposes to introduce a new code of rules.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman explain why that distinction is of any value to the minority or to the new Members of the House? Why in the Fifty-eighth Congress, when I was a new Member, was not I just as much entitled to the privilege of amending the rules as if there had been a change of parties?

Mr. DALZELL. The rules that were then adopted had been discussed originally by the members of the gentleman's party and had been in force for many years. There is no analogy between that case and this at all. Here is a proposition——

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not wish to yield further, I will not annoy him.

Mr. DALZELL. I thought I had pointed out the distinction that exists in my mind.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is the gentleman's full answer, then I am content.

Mr. DALZELL. The proposition under which we are acting to-day is that after the reading of the resolution—and, by the way, the rules are offered as a single proposition en bloc—after the reading of the proposition the minority is entitled to offer a substitute, and then after four hours of general debate, which means nothing, because in general debate we can do nothing more than theorize, the gentlemen on the other side defending their position and we on our side defending our position, but no amendment can be offered, and then at the close of that useless general debate a vote is to be taken. How? "Without delay or intervening motion."

Now, there is adopted in this order one of the most drastic phrases of any of the rules that have heretofore been adopted in this House by either the Republican or the Democratic Party, and which is in violation of one of the provisions of the majority's own code of rule, to the effect that even the Committee on Rules can report no proposition that shall exclude a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What would be the use of a motion to recommit if there is no committee to send it to, no committee of the House?

Mr. MANN. We might recommit it to the Democratic caucus.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That might not have been bad if you had done it previously.

Mr. MANN. It could not have made it any worse.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to engage in general debate on this proposition. I do not care to discuss Republican theories or Democratic theories with respect to the rules, nor do I care to go into in detail the various amendments that have been made, that are proposed to be made, to the rules of the Sixty-first Congress by the code of rules now offered. Every material thing in the code of rules now offered that is of any advantage or of any value has been copied into those rules from the rules of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Republican side.] There is not a single new thing in the code of rules now offered——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. What about Rule X? Did the Republicans put that in? And now, if they are so good, why are you not all willing to vote for them?

Mr. DALZELL. I think, except in some particulars, they are a pretty good code of rules.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then I hope the gentleman's side will vote for them.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman will be disappointed in his hope; not that I would not like to be in his company, but at this time I am afraid I can not be.

Now, the fundamental change in the rules is embodied in Rule X and Rule XI—that is to say, in taking away from the House the opportunity to have the appointment of committees through the medium of the Speaker. Under the Republican rules—because the rules of the Sixty-first Congress were Republican rules—the language was "unless especially ordered by the House the Speaker should appoint the committees." The language of these proposed rules is that there "shall be elected by the House at the commencement of each Congress the following standing committees," and so forth.

So far as the question of electing committees, instead of selecting committees by the Speaker is concerned. I do not propose now to discuss that question. Assuming that the gentlemen on the other side of the House were justified in selecting their committees in the manner in which they have selected them, there is no possible justification for their having added Members to the majority side of these committees without adding any to the minority side of the committees.

I shall leave the discussion of that question to some of the gentlemen who shall follow me.

I think, so far as the provision of these rules is concerned with respect to the appointment of select committees, that it is an improvement on the rules of the Sixty-first Congress. That provision restores a clause that was in the rules of the House from the beginning of the Government up until 1880, which for some reason or other was omitted when the rules were then revised. It reserves to the House, in other words, the right to do as it pleases with respect to select committees and to conference committees, but I see no reason why there should have been taken away from the Members of the committees the right to select their chairman.

In this respect this rule is in one particular in direct violation of the rule adopted at the last Congress, when a Committee on Rules was provided for, because the provision there was that that committee should elect its own chairman. The language is:

> And in case of a permanent vacancy in the chairmanship of any such committee the House shall elect another chairman.

That is, as I say, in direct violation of the terms of the rule adopted at the last Congress when the Committee on Rules was created and power given to it to elect its own chairman.

Mr. GARRETT. That is, of course, a change as to the Committee on Rules; but does not the gentleman think it is a consistent change, that it is consistent with the general principle that the committee was seeking to lay down?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, well, perhaps it is. I have no criticism to make on the ground of consistency.

In the provision for preferential reports, reports of committees which have a preference in the right to report, the present code of rules follows the rules of the Sixty-first Congress in striking out what was in the rules of the Fifty-third Congress, namely, the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and also follows the rules of the Sixty-first Congress in providing a preference for the Committee on Territories and for the Committee on Pensions.

Now, if I would make any criticism on that, it would be that, while good reason existed for striking out the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, because they were made preferential committees in the first place, during the free silver period, I think the same logic that justified that action would justify the restoration of the Committee on Banking and Currency at this time, in view of the fact that we have an existing Monetary Commission and that the probabilities are, if not in the immediate, at least within the near future, Congress will have to deal with questions of currency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that upon the theory that the Monetary Commission is likely to report proposed legislation?

Mr. DALZELL. I said, if not in the immediate, within the near future.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman seriously propose that a Democratic Congress should make privileged bills coming from a Republican Monetary Commission?

Mr. DALZELL. I was not undertaking to judge the action of the Democrats at all, either charitably or uncharitably.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has that impression, it is no doubt based on the recent action of the minority with reference to the reciprocity treaty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman, I understand, is facetious and not serious in that suggestion.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, aside from the question of selecting committees, the only material change, in my judgment—the only serious change, in my judgment—made in the rules of the Sixty-first Congress is in Rule XXI, section 2, by the adoption of what is known as the Holman amendment. I can not, in view of the parliamentary history of this country, do otherwise than regard that as a most dangerous innovation in the rules of the House. In order that the House may thoroughly understand what that is, let me take the time to read it. As that clause appears in the rules of the Sixty-first Congress it is as follows:

> No appropriation shall be recorded in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, that is the existing rule. That has been the rule ever since the Forty-ninth Congress, with an exception. It was the rule in the Forty-ninth Congress, which was Democratic, and the rule in the Fiftieth, which was Democratic, both presided over by Speaker Carlisle, but not the rule, as I recollect now, in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third, which adopted the Holman amendment. Now, the Holman amendment is this:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

Now, that is a provision for legislation on appropriation bills. That is a provision for legislating by the Appropriations Committee. That is a provision which renders useless and unnecessary any other committee of the House. That is a provision which turns over to the Committee on Appropriations all the powers of all the other committees of the House of Representatives. It is wrong in theory, because, in the first place, the Committee on Appropriations ought not to legislate, for the reason that the other branch of Congress is entitled to have an appropriation bill not containing legislation which they have not considered; and, secondly, because the President of the United States is entitled to have an appropriation bill that does not require consideration at his hands of legislation. It is wrong in theory, furthermore, because it is a usurpation of the rights of every other committee and of the jurisdiction of every other committee in the House of Representatives. Now let me call your attention to this rule, or rather to this amendment to the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the rule, without the Holman amendment, was in operation until 1876, when the Holman amendment was adopted, and it remained in operation from 1876 until 1880, until the adoption of the rules in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. I want to show you what kind of legislation resulted from the operation of that rule. On February 5, 1879, an extensive scheme of legislation for the reorganization of the Army was admitted as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill on the discovery by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that the general effect would be to reduce appropriations.

Think of that. A reorganization of the Army put on an appropriation bill upon proof being made to the satisfaction of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that on the whole it would reduce expenditures. Why, my friends, you take the sundry civil appropriation bill that deals with every single department of the Government, that touches the Government in every vital spot, and under this rule the Committee on Appropriations can legislate for every department, for every bureau, for every question that the Government may be directly interested in. Again, on February 19, 1879, an amendment to repeal a portion of the Federal election law was admitted upon discovery by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that it would be a retrenchment of expenditures. On May 18, 1880, an amendment providing for free seed distribution was admitted to the agricultural appropriation bill without a question of order, the wording being so arranged as to reduce the appropriation $80,000 to $79,000. The extent to which legislation was placed on appropriation bills at that time was illustrated on July 27, 1882, the naval appropriation bill being before the Senate, when Mr. John Sherman, of Ohio, deplored the change which the bill had made in its rule to prevent legislation on appropriation bills, and said of the pending bill:

> Here is a bill 40 pages long passed at the heel of the session. It is sent to us. I will say that three-fourths of this bill contains matter either of a mere recitative character or is general legislation affecting the whole organization of the Navy from beginning to end.

Now, then, in the revision of 1880 the Committee on Rules, with John G. Carlisle, Samuel J. Randall, Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, Thomas B. Reed, Mr. Hiscock, of New York, not only reported against the readoption of that rule, but they denounced it in the most strenuous terms, and on the floor of this House——

Mr. BUTLER. What Congress was that?

Mr. DALZELL. That was the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. Democratic?

Mr. DALZELL. A Democratic Congress.

On the floor of the House it was denounced by Roger Q. Mills, of Texas; by Mr. Dockery, of Missouri; by Mr. Sayres, of Texas; by Mr. Springer, of Illinois; by Mr. Bland, of Missouri, all distinguished Democrats, and by every prominent Democrat whose name is historical in the life of that Congress. And yet you gentlemen come here to-day and, in view of the legislative history of that bill, and in view of its denunciations by these great Democrats, undertake to force upon the minority a rule which, instead of reducing expenditures, which, instead of being in the interests of economy, is likely to increase the expenditures and to put upon the statute books legislation that otherwise could not get there. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Then, of course, I can not yield.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a strange and an unusual note from that side of the Chamber to-day. Our friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] complains that the Republican side of this Chamber has not the privilege to offer amendments to these rules, paragraph by paragraph. The rule provides that a substitute may be offered, but he complains that that is not enough. He wants opportunity to amend these rules section by section. This is rather an unusual demand from that side of the Chamber, in the light of the history of the past 10 years. For five successive Congresses, and even longer, I and other Members have sat in our seats here and had a code of rules offered to us, with no other privilege than that of voting for or against the entire code offered by the Republican side of this Chamber. We were not only not allowed to offer amendments in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but, so far as I now recollect, we were not even accorded the privilege of offering a substitute, and often you adopted your rules almost without debate, and now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] makes this novel argument. Because in 1894 the rules of the House were considered for some 6 or 8 weeks, and because there was ample opportunity for debate 17 years ago, and because the rules were then amended as the Fifty-fourth Congress deemed proper, there has been no necessity for amending the rules in the same manner at any time since then until the opposite party came into power. The gentleman from Pennsylvania complains now that the minority, of which he is a member, is not permitted under the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas to amend the code of rules offered by this side of the Chamber, rule by rule, paragraph by paragraph.

Now, let us consider for a moment how the Democratic majority in this Chamber is proposing to consider the rules offered for the government of the House. In the first place, let it not be forgotten that ample time is allowed for general debate. If that side of the Chamber had insisted upon even longer time for general debate, you could have gotten it. You were allowed to offer any substitute upon which you can agree among yourselves.

How did you treat us when you were in power? Usually you adopted the rules of the preceding Congress, with little or no opportunity for debate, with no opportunity for amendment in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and, so far as I now recollect, without the privilege of offering a substitute. We simply had to vote "aye" or "no" on the adoption of the Reed rules. That was the treatment accorded to the minority for years by the Republican majority in this Chamber. For 17 years we have been told over and over again that the Reed rules were about as near perfect as any code of rules could be made. You on that side of the Chamber considered them so nearly perfect that you felt justified in presenting them time and again to this House and forcing Members to vote "aye" or "no," without opportunity at any time to offer amendments or even a substitute. What is the matter with that side of the Chamber to-day? If your Reed rules have been perfect for 17 years, are they not perfect to-day? Are they any less perfect now than they have been during all the years when you forced their adoption, often without debate and never with privilege to amend?

In the rules offered to-day we have taken away from the Speaker the power to name the committees of the House.

Will you gentlemen vote to give that power back to the Speaker? We have written in our rules a provision that the Speaker shall not be a member of the Committee on Rules. Do you gentlemen desire to change that? Do you want to vote for the old rule allowing the Speaker to make up a Rules Committee of five with himself as chairman? Why do you not stand by these perfect rules under which you have been running the House? Are you ready to restore to the Speaker that power which so long made it necessary for the individual Member to go to him privately, get on his knees, and beg for the privilege of being recognized on the floor in order to ask for unanimous consent? Why do you not offer your perfect code of rules as a substitute for the rules offered by the gentleman from Texas? Are those rules so bad that no one can be found on that side of the Chamber who is willing to offer them as a substitute for the rules now under consideration? Has it come to pass that the rules which governed the House for nearly two decades are without a single friend on this floor? Every change which has been made, Mr. Speaker, is in the direction of limiting the power of the Speaker and restoring to the individual membership of this House rights and privileges which never should have been taken away.

You gentlemen pursued your policy of centralization of power until you made the American House of Representatives well-nigh the laughingstock in the eyes of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. POU. For a brief question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Are the rules in respect to centralization in the Sixty-first Congress any different from the rules of the Fifty-third Congress which the gentleman has used as a model? I mean the Democratic rules.

Mr. POU. I do not know exactly to what the gentleman refers.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I mean with reference to a Member going to the Speaker on his knees for unanimous consent, and the Speaker having the power to grant it.

Mr. POU. Nobody now has to go to the Speaker begging for unanimous consent unless he wants to do so.

Mr. MANN. Both of these gentlemen voted against the rules.

Mr. MADISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. For a question.

Mr. MADISON. Is it not true that under the rules as now proposed, that upon the matter of the suspension of the rules, if any Member here under the rules, as you propose them, desires to make a motion to suspend the rules, he has to go to the Speaker in his chamber and ask for recognition?

Mr. POU. You have a perfect right to ask it right here on the floor.

Mr. MADISON. I will ask the gentleman if there is any modification whatever in the rules of the Sixty-first Congress as to that matter, and if it is not true that under those rules and the rulings made by a Democratic Speaker that you have still got to go to the Speaker's chamber and make arrangements in advance for recognition for a suspension of the rules?

Mr. POU. Not at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is done out in the open under a Democratic Speaker and administration of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. And, Mr. Speaker, a Democratic Speaker would not abuse that privilege, anyway. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to yield further. I submit again the proposition stated in the beginning, that every change recommended—and you gentlemen know it to be so—has been toward limiting the power of the Speaker and enlarging the power of the individual Members of this House.

Now, there has been a good deal said with respect to Rule XXI and with respect to Rule XXVIII, which provides for the discharge of committees of the House. We do not contend that these rules are perfect. We do contend, though, that they both are better than the old rules. If a fair trial shall prove that these rules do not work well, they can and will no doubt be amended. Now, I want to say this: If gentlemen propose deliberately to go about it to make Rule XXVIII a farce, when it was intended to confer upon individual Members larger powers, possibly they can to some extent succeed. If gentlemen deliberately plan and scheme to nullify the laudable purpose of this rule, it is possible, I say, they may partially succeed; and that can be said of other rules as well. Any man who sets out to obstruct legislation can do a great deal along that line. We all know that, but we have improved Rule XXVIII in several respects, we think, and if necessity shall develop, it can be still further amended.

The same may be said with respect to the criticism of Rule XXI, which is among the most important changes we have made. The rule provides two things—first, that a proposition which changes existing law shall be germane; second, that its effect shall be to retrench and economize. Those two requirements must be met, but if revolutionary measures are offered under cover of this rule, if it shall be found that there are real dangers of abuse, the Committee on Rules will, I am sure, take such action as may be deemed wise and necessary; but I do not believe there is basis for the criticism of this rule.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield a minute there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. POU. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I understand a ruling was made on this provision in the Fifty-second Congress and at various other times. An amendment was offered to the post-office appropriation bill which nominally reduced the amount of the gross appropriations. With that same amendment there was incorporated a totally different provision, totally changing existing law in a way not contemplated by the spirit of the Holman rule. Yet, as that rule was then interpreted by Mr. Buchanan, of Virginia, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and as it was subsequently held on other occasions, such amendments were held in order merely because they reduced the gross amount of an appropriation, irrespective of what else they might do.

Mr. POU. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can not yield further. The gentleman is making a speech in my time. I do not believe there is basis for fears expressed as to the abuse of this rule, but if experience shall show that the purpose of the rule can be perverted in the manner suggested we will simply have to amend that rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. POU. Just a word more, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that so much of my time has been taken up by interruptions.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield a minute more to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. POU. The Committee on Rules, Mr. Speaker, has made an honest effort to revise these rules in a way that will, in a proper manner, enlarge the powers of the individual membership of this House. If it shall develop that further amendments are necessary, the committee will not stand for the policy of stifling legislation demanded by the people, and in so far as it has the power, it will aid in restoring to each Member every right he is entitled to exercise and enjoy in this Chamber. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this: No code of rules which ever will be adopted by this House will be perfect. We claim that the rules offered by the gentleman from Texas, who will be chairman of the Committee on Rules, are better by far than the code of rules under which the House has been working for years.

Reforms begun have not been abandoned. There has been no step backward. The right of the Member to request unanimous consent for the present consideration of any measure in which he is interested is enlarged by the provision allowing him to reinstate his measure a second time. Several useless committees have been abolished and other changes made which will result in a saving of many thousands of dollars; and I want to repeat, if other changes shall become necessary to restore to every Member every right to which he ought to be entitled under the Constitution, the committee will not turn a deaf ear to any reasonable suggestion. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. [Applause.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have been one of those who have always believed that the question of rules for the government of the House was not a partisan proposition. I have always thought we ought to adopt rules for the government of this body without taking into consideration which political party was in control of it. I ought to demand the same rules for my government and my control as a Member of this House when my political opponents are in the majority that I insist upon for myself when my own political party is in control.

I want to discuss briefly the proposed rules, now before the House, and to suggest to the House some amendments that I believe will appeal to every man, regardless of his political affiliations, if he believes in fair play and good legislation, and likewise believes in remedying the defects that have been developed in the past under our rules.

I regret that we are placed in such a parliamentary situation here that while we can talk and talk and talk we are not allowed to offer amendments and to vote. One of the greatest prerogatives of Members of this House is to be permitted to vote upon propositions material to our people and upon propositions material to the control of our own body.

Now, to begin with, I want to say that some of the amendments to the old rules that are proposed in this schedule of rules now before us are, in my judgment, good ones and amendments that I would gladly support. At the same time the first one that I am going to mention, I believe, does not give, in place of the old rule, as good a remedy for what I believe to be the acknowledged defects of the old rule as we could get if no man's hands were tied by a caucus and every man voted as he felt and not as he feared.

These rules provide that the committees of the House of Representatives shall be selected by the House. It takes away from the Speaker the power of appointing the standing committees. That particular principle of taking from the Speaker the power to appoint the standing committees of the House is something that a good many of us over here on this side have stood for, worked for, and almost died for for the last two or three years. As far as you go in taking that power away from the Speaker you have done well and are entitled to praise, but you put down the gag rule then and say that the method that you provide in its place shall not be amended. You tie every man's hands and refuse to allow any amendments to be offered. You let us talk, but deprive us of the right to offer or vote upon amendments.

If I had had the opportunity, I would have offered an amendment that in substance is the same as the original amendment that was offered here on the 17th day of March a year ago last month, and for which many of us over here stand. I realize that this particular amendment could not prevail, because you are tied up by caucus action, and I believe that all the amendments that I am going to suggest would prevail if every man here was free. I believe that there is a majority of Members here who believe in it, and that it would bring the proper relief, so that we ought to have had the right to offer it and to vote upon it. The right to vote is much more precious than the right to discuss. On page 6 of the pamphlet containing these rules I would offer an amendment as follows:

Strike out the first paragraph of Rule X and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The standing committees of the House shall be selected by the Committee on Rules, which committee shall consist of 15 members, 9 of whom shall be members of the majority party and 6 of whom shall be members of the minority party or parties, to be selected as follows: The States of the Union shall be divided by a committee of three, appointed by the Speaker for that purpose, into nine groups, each group containing as near as may be an equal number of members belonging to the majority party. The States of the Union shall likewise be divided into six groups, each group containing as near as may be an equal number of members belonging to the minority party or parties. At 10 o'clock a. m. of the day following the adoption of the report of said committee each of the said groups shall meet and select one of its number a member of the Committee on Rules. The place of meeting for each of said groups shall be designated by said committee of three in its report. Each of said groups shall report to the House the name of the member selected for membership on the Committee on Rules. Each standing committee shall elect its own chairman. The Speaker shall not be eligible to membership on any standing committee. The following shall be the standing committees of the House, namely."

Mr. GARRETT and Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman think it would be very bad policy to put into the rules and continue in the rules a proposition of majority and minority parties?

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say to the gentleman, as I have already said, that I firmly believe, and there are a good many others that think with me, that that particular change in the rules would bring the greatest possible relief and provide a very good way for the selection of committees. As I said before, I do not expect this to carry, but we ought to have had the right to go on record for what we believe, and conscientiously believe, to be the best remedy for this situation. Having said that much about it, unless I can be afforded further time I hope gentlemen will not take my time on this amendment, because I have others that I want to discuss.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for one question right there?

Mr. NORRIS. If I had the time, I would be glad to. The objection to the method of selecting committees provided in this schedule of rules is, as I look at it, that it results in caucus selection of committees. I believe the amendment I have suggested would obviate that. I believe we ought to get away from the caucus just as much and just as often and just as far as we can. I believe the time is not far distant when the progressive, patriotic sentiment of the American people will drive the caucus and the political boss and the political machine out of business.

Now, I want to suggest another amendment on page 9 of this pamphlet, and I would like to have the membership follow me, because I am satisfied these amendments will meet with the approval of a vast majority here if they will consider them. At the end of clause 4, Rule X, add a new paragraph, as follows:

No Member shall be eligible to serve at the same time on more than one of the following standing committees: Appropriations, the Judiciary, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Rivers and Harbors, Agriculture, the Post Office and Post Roads, and Ways and Means.

Now, I have no objection to adding other committees to this list, if there would be an opportunity here to offer an amendment. I would not confine it myself to those particular committees, but, as far as these committees are concerned, it ought to appeal to every man who has been in the House of Representatives for any length of time that there are two reasons why no Member should serve at the same time on two of these committees. First, it is not just to the other Members who are deprived of the privilege and who are not allowed to serve on any of those important committees; and, second, it is not fair to the House and the country, because a Member can not perform the duties properly as a Representative if he is liable to be called, for instance, by the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on very important matters for consideration at the same hour.

Members will realize that I will not be able to discuss in detail all of the benefits that would come from that rule and some others that I will offer, because my time is too limited.

On page 5 of this pamphlet I would like to offer an amendment as follows:

After section 5, Rule X, add a new section, as follows:
"SEC. 6. The Speaker shall not be eligible to serve on any standing committee."

I am not going to discuss that, because I want to go on with some other amendments that I would like to propose; but I think the justice of that will appeal to every Member of the House.

If I were not prevented by this caucus gag I would offer the following amendment:

On page 13, after paragraph 57, Rule XI, add a new paragraph, as follows:
"Unless otherwise ordered by the committee, the business and records of all committees shall be public, and the record of a vote to go into executive session shall be public."

I am satisfied that much of the criticism that has come—some of it justly and some of it unjustly—against the House of Representatives has been because there have been too many executive sessions of committees. We ought to open the door and give the light of publicity full sway in the committee room as we do here on the floor of the House. Every man knows that it is out of order on the floor of the House for a Member to state what took place behind closed doors in the committee. The public—the press—are not able to get the information, and naturally there is a suspicion, in many cases, perhaps, a wrong impression goes out. It may be in many instances that it is necessary to have a secret meeting. I can imagine such conditions might arise, but we ought to at least reverse the present rule, and instead of making the presumption true that all the business must be secret unless otherwise ordered, we ought to make it public unless the members of the committee are ready to go on record and say that it is of such nature that it ought to be private. Publicity will not injure any honest attempt at legislation, and we all know many meritorious bills are secretly killed in the committee room, and the country is not able to locate the responsibility.

Now, I would like to offer on page 28 of this pamphlet the following amendment, and this refers to calendar Wednesday, a subject that was called up just a while ago in debate by my friend the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON]. After the word "Union," in line 11, paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV, insert the following:

And in considering any such bill before the Committee of the Whole House all general debate shall be confined to the bill under consideration, and the said committee shall have the power to limit and to close such general debate.

Under the rule as brought in here and as it existed in the last Congress, the Committee of the Whole House can not close general debate, and we all know, those of us who were here in the last Congress, that there were instances when men got the floor under general debate on calendar Wednesday and consumed the entire time discussing something that was not before the committee, and the committee was helpless to limit general debate or to close it. To do that, it was compelled to go back into the House and get action by the House. No man would vote against this amendment if King Caucus would only unfasten the fetters.

I would like to have offered on page 30 of this code of rules the following amendment:

At the end of paragraph 1, Rule XXVII, add the following:
"The Speaker shall not entertain any motion to suspend the rules unless such motion or the substance or notice thereof shall be printed on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent on the day when such motion is entertained."

Now, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] said that the object of these proposed rules was to lessen the power of the Speaker and increase the power of the Member. Under the rule, the same as it existed before and as you have repeated it in the proposed code, the Speaker is absolutely in control on suspension day. He is absolutely supreme. He can recognize or not recognize as he sees fit.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Speaker need not recognize a Member, and no Member is entitled to recognition under this rule unless the Speaker desires to give it to him. Now, I do not seek to take that power away. If I had my way about it, I would take it away altogether; but I wanted to make this change moderate, so it would have no doubt in passing, and therefore I only provided that notice must be given to the House so that it will be published on the calendar and the Members of the House may know what is coming up under suspension. There is no way now, under this Democratic caucus proposed rule, of finding out what it is. The Speaker and the man he is going to recognize carry it in their breasts. We will sit here all day and never know what the next motion to suspend the rules is going to be unless one of these men tells us. Why would it not be reasonable and fair to put on the calendar a notice of this motion, the same as must be done with all bills reported from committees. If this wonderful power on suspension day is to be vested in the Speaker, why not require that notice to the membership shall be given as to what bills the Speaker is going to have taken up?

I want to refer briefly now, in conclusion, because I have not the time to discuss these questions as I would like to, to the parliamentary situation as it exists at the present time. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] said he wanted to enlarge the power of the individual, and yet this very rule you have brought in here and have adopted by a party vote cuts off the right of every individual Member here to offer amendments to these rules, something I must serve under, something you must serve under, and the country must live under for the next two years. I want to say that you are not practicing what you preach. [Applause on Republican side.] You ought to have permitted amendments to be offered here. I do not care whether in the past some Republican majority has been that tyrannical or not. I never have stood for it. I never believed in a gag rule from my own party, and I want to say that it does not taste any better when it comes from the other party. [Applause on Republican side.] It seems to me you have given us an exhibition here of just what you have claimed you were going to avoid. We ought to have had the right to offer amendments here in good faith. These rules must govern me just the same as they must govern you, and I want to say that you can not justify yourself by saying that Republicans did the same thing some other time.

I have heard that argument and excuse made many times on both sides of this House. I have heard Republicans justify their application of the gag by referring to equally drastic gags applied by the Democrats, and to-day we find the Democrats citing Republican precedent. In neither case is the argument either good or logical. Democratic sin will not justify Republican wickedness and Republican tyranny will not excuse Democratic coercion. Instead of seeing if we can not be as bad as our opponents have been we should bend our energies and ambitions toward improvement. The people will not be satisfied when we tell them we were no worse than someone else has been. Instead of imitating what is wrong we should try to improve and stand for what is right. I have refused, when my party was in control of the House, to surrender my convictions at the behest of King Caucus, and I decline to-day to submit my hands to his shackles when he comes in the guise of a Democrat. There ought to be no caucuses on matters of legislation. You know these amendments I have proposed to-day would be adopted if your hands were not shackled and every man was allowed to follow the dictates of his own conscience. Many of you men on the Democratic side, and nearly all of your newspapers, condemned Republican Party machine methods. There are some of us over here who came out in the open, and at the expense of political punishment and the surrender of political patronage, fought those same methods and that same machine. That machine to-day seems to be on the Democratic side of the aisle. King Caucus seems to be there in control, and if you surrender your consciences to him you will be in as great a political slavery as though you were ruled by a czar on the Speaker's throne. When my party was in power I stood here in my place and denounced rules that came in from this side and said then that we could not afford to back up our action by saying that Democrats had done the same thing some time before; and that applies to you to-day. It ought to be nonpartisan. We ought not to tie ourselves up here with a gag rule and by a caucus. You are not elected here to serve a caucus. A caucus nine times out of ten means only that 51 men shall compel 50 men to do what they do not want to do and do not believe in. It means that a majority of a majority will control the House, which often will be a minority of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have listened very attentively to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. He talks well and intelligently, as he always does, and yet, when you sum it up, he has arraigned not the tentative rules of this House, but the caucus. Now, I would say to the gentleman from Nebraska, there are caucuses and caucuses. A caucus can be a dog and cat fight and a caucus can be a friendly conference of conceding brethren. It depends upon whether it was held on last Saturday or the Monday following. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This caucus action is nothing more or less than a unanimous statement of the Democratic membership of this House to the country of the concurrent views of men willing to concede to their brothers. The rules of this House will find in their last analysis no more perfect defense than the fact that when for the first time in eight long years, to my knowledge, an opportunity was given to the minority party to offer a substitute, which substitute could have cured all the ills of which you complain, no such substitute was offered.

These gentlemen have arraigned against particular flaws against this or that or the other provision of these new rules. Is it true, gentlemen, that your objections are captious, ill-considered, extemporized on the spur of the moment simply for the purpose of finding fault? If these objections have weight with your own party, if these objections have not behind them a majority of your membership, or if they were worthy of consideration, why were not they incorporated in the substitute which is offered to the rules of the House? I know of nothing which more commends the Democratic Party to the House than these rules as offered, unless it be the captious and almost frivolous objections made by the gentlemen upon the other side. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] concedes that in their essentials they are admirable rules. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] makes objection not to the substance, but to the form of the rules. It is a matter of comparative little importance whether the committees of this House are named by caucus and made in harmony, as far as Democrats and Republicans are concerned, or made by particular sections. The only thing which the country demanded, and the thing which these rules have provided, is the right that the House should name its committees, and the manner in which the House acted, so it acted untrammeled and intelligently, is of infinitely small importance. It is a mere matter of detail.

Every other objection that has been offered to these rules has been of a like character. The truth is that the rules as a whole stand unassailed and are unassailable. When they are reviewed it will be found that there is not a single popular demand, there is not a single rational reform demanded by the people that is not conceded by the rules. It has been suggested, sir, that committees of this House were formerly created, some for the purpose of reporting legislation that was acceptable to a coterie, some for the purpose of becoming a mausoleum of legislation that was foredoomed to eternal death. Under the rules of this House no man can hereafter name, organize, and control these committees. They provide further, even after a committee has been organized, a rational and efficient method by which committees can be discharged from further consideration of a bill if the people demand consideration of that bill. In all other details we present the rules of this House to this House, believing that they contain all the provisions, believing that they are a system by which a harmonious party can operate with facility and with efficiency in carrying out the great, the wise, and the beneficent legislation which it will soon be our pleasing duty to crystallize into the statutes of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] use some of his time now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in my legislative life I have always tried to be candid and direct. I believe in a government by the people acting through majorities. That is the way we got here as individual Representatives, and I believe that the majority in the House of Representatives, responsible only to the people of the United States, could not avoid the responsibility if they would—and I dare say they would not if they could—and must be the sole judge, with plenary power, as to what rules they will adopt and as to what legislation they will enact.

And I want to say here and now that substantially the rules proposed by this resolution are an indorsement of nearly all that is good in the rules that have evoluted since the adoption of the Constitution, and, therefore, I am not going to criticize the rules where they do or where they do not sin merely because the majority of the House proposes to adopt them. Sometimes majorities and minorities tear passion to tatters and appeal—and I do not say it offensively—sometimes from the standpoint of demagoguery and claptrap to people that would not know a rule or a code of rules if they would meet in the middle of a street.

I have had a good deal to do with rules during my legislative life. I reported, as a member of the Committee on Rules in the Fifty-first Congress, what were then denounced by an almost unanimous press and by a violent minority as the "infamous Reed rules." I examined again this morning to see how that code was considered. It was thrown open to amendment, with two days' general debate, and, in addition, one day under the five-minute rule, and with the most perfect freedom of amendment, and the previous question ordered at 5 o'clock on the third day upon the rule and all pending amendments. [Applause on the Republican side.] And at that time the Republicans had a majority of 5. You now have a majority of 63. I submit to you, as you are now flopping your wings together on that side and have complete harmony and solidarity, that perchance you might, from the standpoint of propriety, give the minority a chance to offer amendments to the rules for consideration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But, after all, you are the best judges. You have full power. I say that you are the best judges, because you are responsible, as majorities are always responsible, and, therefore, if you are mistaken in judgment, and it leads to bad consequences, the responsibility will prove uncomfortable to you.

I say again that, substantially, I agree that this is a valuable code of rules as proposed by your resolution. I recollect very well that at the close of the Fifty-first Congress there was no leader upon the other side, there was no member of the minority, that would observe the usual courtesies and offer a resolution thanking Speaker Reed for his courtesy and fairness.

I offered the resolution, and had to move the previous question upon it, and on a roll call, without any exception, every member of the minority voted "no." It was a great revolution. And yet in the two Congresses that were presided over so ably by the late Speaker Crisp, you absolutely took all the reforms, counting a quorum, and others, and adopted them; and you propose to do it to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.] Well, for 16 years the Republican majority have lived and enacted legislation under these rules, and in that time—and I measure my words—proved by the legislation that has been written upon the statute books that it is wiser legislation, better legislation, and more far-reaching and important legislation than was ever written upon the statute books in all the history of the American Congress for over 120 years. So much for that.

But you say you have come in and that you are here. That is true. In my time of nearly 40 years of service I served in the minority 14 years. So you have come in 7 times before coming in now. I trust that your legislation will be such and that your legislative action will be such that you may not go out on account of the conditions to which the country will come under your jurisdiction and action. That remains to be seen.

Now, it is wonderful how, as the pendulum swings back and forth, men change in their opinions and in their votes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], in my absence from the floor, I having his remarks now before me, referred evidently to the late Speaker of the House, and I just got in in time to hear the applause that followed his remarks. Gentlemen, the late Speaker of the House has no apology to offer to the majority, to the minority, to the country for the manner in which he administered that great office under the rules of the House for eight years. [Applause on the Republican side.] But the gentleman from North Carolina referred to a saying of Speaker Reed that in 15 years no Speaker had been overruled and, in his opinion, would not be. There was further great applause. But the former Speaker of this House in the last Congress, after a two days' contest, was overruled by a majority. Majorities are all powerful. For the time being they may disregard the fixed law of the land. For the time being they may run over and spit upon and trample upon the rules of the House. They have full and plenary power, including the power to remove a Speaker. I could rise in my place, Mr. Speaker, now, under the highest constitutional privilege, and move, sir, to remove you, and you would be compelled to entertain the motion, and you would be removed, provided the majority said so. [Laughter.] But, in any event, it would force consideration.

Now, one further matter. One year ago and a little over the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] arose in his place, as he stated, to a constitutionally privileged question. He had to be recognized. For what? He proposed to change the rules. It was debated. The Chair ruled that the rules could not be amended in that way and cited all the precedents that had ever been made by Speakers of all parties that had preceded him.

The gentleman from Nebraska appealed, and then there was a majority that overruled the Speaker. How? By a solid Democratic minority, plus enough voting with them on the Republican side to constitute a majority; and there was a new majority, and the Speaker's decision was overruled.

At the late session of Congress the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] arose to a question of constitutional privilege and proposed to amend the rules, offering his resolution. It was debated. The gentleman from Missouri, the present Speaker, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and other gentlemen debated the point of order, and held inside of 12 short months that that motion was not in order. And when the Chair sustained the point of order, saying that one decision made by a majority of the House would not in his opinion constitute such a precedent as to overrule all former decisions, an appeal was had, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], who arraigned the ex-Speaker to-day by inference, and the gentleman from Alabama, the leader of the majority now, but of the minority then, and the gentleman who is the present Speaker of the House, fell over themselves to sustain the Chair on precisely the same question upon which they had previously voted to overrule the Chair. [Applause on the Republican side.] I submit to the criticizing gentleman from North Carolina—no, I am told that it was the gentleman from Texas, and I will apologize to North Carolina——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. It was the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. CANNON. I did not hear him, and I have had to depend on the notes. I submit to him that the criticism that the former Speaker was overruled is fully answered by the statement that he voted along with all his party colleagues to sustain the Speaker. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And now it is said that we have a Unanimous Consent Calendar. I am glad that we have. Along with that is the saying, in the language of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and the universal representation of the uplift magazines [laughter], that it is no longer necessary to crawl upon your knees, hat in hand, to ask the Speaker for recognition for unanimous consent.

No, no. The Speaker is a Member of the House. I am a Member of the House, and I never felt less like dying than I do now. [Laughter and applause.] When the Unanimous Consent Calendar is called, if my judgment prompts me to object to the consideration of a bill, no doubt the man in charge of that bill will, figuratively, come on his hands and knees, with hat in hand, even the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], trying to convince his co-Member on the floor that the consideration of the bill ought not to be objected to.

I said I was glad there was a Unanimous Consent Calendar. You will not pass so many bills by unanimous consent; but I congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, as I congratulated myself upon the creation of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Before that time I made it an absolute rule, as one Member of the House, not to submit any bill under a request for unanimous consent that I would have objected to from the floor; because the Speaker is a Member of the House, and when he refuses to submit a matter for unanimous consent he does not refuse as Speaker, but as a Member, for the Speaker always can object as a Member.

The old practice entailed upon the Speaker the absolute duty to examine every bill submitted for unanimous consent, and he did not submit a bill unless, in his judgment, it had that merit and that want of importance, if you choose, that entitled it to be considered with safety in the way in which we consider unanimous-consent bills.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. How much more time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CANNON. Very brief time.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I think I can finish in that time. I say you will not pass so many unanimous-consent bills as you did under the old practice, but I shall vote against any amendment, now or in the future, to dispense with that calendar, because I know how it relieves the Speaker to have it.

Ah, but, Mr. Speaker, you are not a member of the Committee on Rules, and that is a great thing that has been established, because otherwise you would have been a czar. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Let me tell you about the rules. Under the uniform practice, up to the last session of Congress, the Speaker was a member of a committee of five, of which he was chairman. Proposed amendments to the rules and proposed special orders were sent to that committee. No report was ever made from any Committee on Rules until there had been a thorough canvass of the majority side of the House, and it was practically certain that it was the will of the majority that the temporary rule or special order should be made, because the business could not be properly done under the ordinary rules of the House in the presence of 30,000 other bills, and that the proposed special order would secure a majority vote. So, how the czar fades out!

To the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] I have this to say: I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Rules, or will be chairman of that committee, consisting of 11 men. I venture the prophecy here that no report will come from that committee until a caucus of the other side of the House have instructed the gentleman to make it, or there has been the equivalent of a caucus by canvassing his side of the House to assure him that he has a majority. Czar HENRY, are you any more or less a czar than was the Speaker?

Mr. ELLERBE. Hurrah for HENRY! [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Yes; hurrah for HENRY! He has done pretty good work on these rules [applause on the Democratic side] with the exception of two things. There is the want of one amendment and the presence of another that are subjects of legitimate criticism. If you will read the amendments touching the discharge of committees, you will find that there is no provision that enables the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] constituting one party and the only member of it, or any other gentleman who has perchance a wild-eyed or sensible proposition, to obtain a discharge of the Committee on Rules. The gentleman drops a resolution into the box to go to the Committee on Rules providing that they shall report a rule for the consideration of his bill. Every other committee in the House may be discharged, but under this resolution to discharge the Committee on Rules from consideration of a bill and bring it before the House a motion will not be in order, and no amendment can be offered here to amend this resolution. Why did you do it? My dear friend and colleague, the honorable gentleman from Texas, why, oh, why did you do it?

Was there any danger of interfering with your czar-like power if you were subject to the same rule that the Ways and Means Committee and the Appropriations Committee and every other committee is subjected? Nay, nay.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Now there is one vicious amendment to these proposed rules and that is known as the Holman amendment. It proposes to make in order legislation upon an appropriation bill provided it decreases the appropriation—by way of a salary to officers and various other provisions.

I undertake to say as practiced by the House heretofore that a man might move to amend an appropriation for a million of dollars by striking off one dollar and then loading on enough iniquitous legislation to be dragged through on an appropriation bill to wreck a party. You tried it, and after you tried it your own people amended it, and now you bring it back with a flapping of wings and a crowing, and say that you are going to work out great economies. Gentlemen, I should be apprehensive of your power had I not in my lifetime in Congress and out of Congress heard people thunder in the index. We will wait and see, and if, perchance you should be clothed with power again in 1912 [applause on the Democratic side] I said "if perchance" [laughter and applause on the Republican side], you will modify or repeal that provision.

Now, I think that is about all I care to say. I thank you for allowing me to consume more time than perhaps I ought to have taken. I yield back to the gentleman from Illinois the remainder of my time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, we have listened with interest and with profit to the very entertaining and illuminating discussion, both of political conditions and of the rules to which we have just been treated by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Whatever may be the state of our feelings politically toward that gentleman, most of the Members on this side entertain for him the kindest personal feelings, and however much we rejoice and the country rejoices at the downfall of the political system of which he so long stood out as the most conspicuous example, yet we not only entertain toward the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the kindly personal feelings already alluded to, but also have for him that respect we feel for the warrior who can endure defeat but rebels at surrender; and when we meet him in joint discussion we feel for him that "stern joy that warriors feel for foemen worthy of their steel." The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] have undertaken to complain bitterly of this side of the House, because they say that the majority has gagged the minority. While I am not an old man either in years or point of service on this floor, yet I must say that I have had enough experience here to be utterly astonished that these gentlemen should advance such a contention. For four successive Congresses I have seen the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] rise in his place on the majority side and move that the rules of the last House be adopted and upon that motion demand the previous question, after allowing 20 minutes' debate to each side, and without offering the slightest opportunity for amendment. And yet to-day, because the Democratic Party, in power in this House for the first time in 16 years, insists that after a general discussion of 4 hours and after the minority has been afforded an ample opportunity to offer a complete substitute for each and every rule of the code of rules we offer, these gentleman, with amazing inconsistency, in view of their past performances, cry out to the country against the "gag" that the Democratic Party has applied to them and to the minority.

When the gentlemen have fully collaborated with each other and have completed their new treatise on "gagging," it will be a most interesting as well as amusing production.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] asserts that the code of rules we present to-day is "substantially, in all respects, a revision of the House rules." Against this statement of his we shall put the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who asserts that "substantially the rules proposed by this resolution are an indorsement of nearly all that is good in the rules that we have evoluted since the adoption of the Constitution." The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] criticizes the majority for not throwing open the rules to individual amendment, because, as he contends, they are substantially different from the rules of the last Congress, and yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asserts that the new rules are practically the same as those of the last House, and has congratulated the majority upon them. The truth is, in my judgment, neither gentleman is right. The rules we propose are in many respects identical with the similar rules of the last Congress and of many preceding Congresses, and yet in some respects they are vitally and fundamentally different from those of any previous Congress. The complaint of the American people against the last and the three immediately preceding Congresses was that under the rules and under the practice the power of the Speaker had been built up until he had become a literal boss, able to control legislation in the House, to stifle it when it suited his purpose, and to pass it when he favored it. This was accomplished, or was at least capable of accomplishment, by the two powers that rested in the Speaker: First, the power to appoint all committees, and, second, the power of recognition.

The American people do not believe in bosses, either in city, in State, or in Nation. Least of all will they tolerate a system of bossism in the House of Representatives. They have determined that no such system shall be possible here in this House, composed of their direct and chosen Representatives, and when the Republican Party turned a deaf ear to their demand that the system which had fastened its iron grip upon the House be destroyed, they commissioned the Democratic Party to work their will. In the last Congress enough Republican Representatives joined the solid Democratic minority to work a great reform by providing that the Committee on Rules should not be appointed by the Speaker and that the Speaker should not be a member thereof. They did not go far enough, in that they failed to also provide that the House itself, instead of the Speaker, select all of the great committees to consider and report proposed legislation. To-day we execute the will of the American people and bow to their mandate when we provide that the House itself shall elect every standing committee. This change in itself is fundamental, sweeping, and far-reaching. If no other change than this was made, the fight for popular rights in this House would not have been made in vain, and the Democratic Party would have fulfilled its pledges and served the people well.

So far as the power of recognition is concerned we frankly concede that the Speaker's right of selection among several Members who seek recognition at the same time on questions of equal privilege can not and ought not to be impaired. This power is discretionary and must, in the very nature of things, be lodged somewhere. Where, then, except in the duly chosen Speaker? So far as the Speaker's power of recognition for legislative purposes, strictly speaking, is concerned, we have very much curtailed it and rendered the individual membership of this House freer and more independent. We think we have very much improved both the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, calendar Wednesday, and the Calendar of Motions to Discharge the Committees. We believe that under the practical operation of the rules that we propose the individual Member will have a larger opportunity if he is only diligent and active. When it is asserted that some of these last-named reforms came during the Sixty-first Congress, we reply that such of them as did come were literally forced down the throats of an unwilling and protesting majority by the solid Democratic vote aided by a few independent Republicans. To-day the Democratic Party preserves these reforms, has improved them, and hopes to still further improve them in the future.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I quite agree with the gentleman on the proposition that the rule as to discharging committees is improved. Does not the gentleman think that rule ought to be further amended, so that there will be a way left in the rules themselves for their own amendment? In other words, so that a resolution introduced for the purpose of amending a rule and being referred to the Committee on Rules, if not acted upon by that committee, might be gotten before the House?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the gentleman with perfect candor on that proposition. In theory he may be right; but the Rules Committee is the one important political committee in this House controlling general procedure in the transaction of its business, and we do not think the Rules Committee should be discharged by any procedure until the majority can fully consider it and fully manifest its will. Until this happens, it should not be done.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is it not true that under the rules as now proposed there is no way left for amending a rule unless the Committee on Rules shall see fit to recommend it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; there is no way to get consideration of such a proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. There is no way to get consideration of it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will also say to the gentleman that the objection he makes could also be applied to all propositions on the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees. Then, if you put a bill on its appropriate calendar, you would not get immediate consideration for it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is true; but you will get it on the way.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will tell the gentleman again candidly that we do not think that the political party in power should make the concession he suggests.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and several of his associates on that side of the Chamber who sympathized with him in his fight in the last House on this rules question complained that we did not allow each and every Member of the minority full opportunity of amending each and every rule we present.

In reply, we say that we realize that this Government of ours is practically operated and conducted through the agency of political parties, and we submit that on so important a question as the adoption of rules for the transaction of public business and for the execution of the will of the people the party in power must adopt such rules as it thinks best suited to meet the responsibility resting upon it and to enable it to execute the popular will. Of course if it should adopt rules that are unfair to the minority, unjust and oppressive to the people, and subversive of their rights, then the party in power must pay the penalty for such exercise of its power, as the Republican Party did in the last election; but the Democratic Party in this House, conscious of its responsibility and anxious to meet it, presents to the House and to the country, as a result of party action, a code of rules upon which it is willing to stand, as fair and just to the minority and to the country, and thinks it has the perfect right to require of its great political opponent in this body that it shall present its proposition on this great subject as a matter of party policy, if at all. If we are able to agree on this side of the Chamber unanimously and harmoniously on our proposition about this much-vexed and much-discussed question of rules, and it shall develop that the minority is unable to present any definite proposition in lieu of what we offer to the House and to the country, or any policy on this question on which they can agree upon among themselves, then we say it but serves to emphasize and drive home the fact that the Democratic Party is united and harmonious, able to transact the public business, and able to meet its responsibilities, while the Republican Party on this floor is divided and discordant, unable to agree on anything, even when in a minority. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, just one more word in reference to the criticism made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The gentleman objects to the provision of the rules reenacting what is known as the Holman amendment, which provides in effect that a provision of or an amendment to an appropriation bill shall not be subject to the point of order that it changes existing law, provided the amendment retrenches expenditure. I am not surprised that the gentlemen on the other side object to any rule that renders it impossible to reduce expenditure. Their present performances are quite consistent with their past record. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] particularly objects to this Holman provision, because he says that it confers on the House the power to legislate in connection with general appropriation bills.

The reason that he gives for objecting is one of the strongest reasons I have for supporting this great change in the rules, which, in my opinion, will do so much to enhance both the dignity and importance of this body.

It is my deliberate judgment that when the House surrendered some years ago the right to legislate on appropriation bills it immeasurably lowered both its dignity in the eyes of the public and its power as a legislative factor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Certainly I shall favor, and I think I voice the sentiment on this side when I say we shall favor, the employment of all reasonable and proper means to increase the dignity and importance of this House; that comes direct every two years from the American people and is responsive to the popular will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The rules we have presented to-day are, of course, not perfect; the work of man never is. We do not believe, however, that the minority can offer as a substitute any definite proposition that is better; nor do we think that the trifling and unimportant changes that have been suggested during the progress of this discussion are of enough value to justify the House in halting now at the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]. We believe we have met the popular demand upon us and have executed the popular will in the preparation and presentation of this code of rules, and we have endeavored to make our general rules as fair and just as possible, and we do not think that special rules should be forced out of the Committee on Rules except in response to the definite will and declared policy of the party in power. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I trust the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will use some of his time now.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, under the special rule just adopted under the previous question, without any opportunity for debate, the time allowed is of course too short to discuss this proposed body of rules, but of what use is discussion when we are not permitted to amend them? Under that special rule thus arbitrarily and unfairly adopted we are not permitted even to offer amendments. I deem it worth while, however, to call the attention of the House and of the country to one or two points. There never was before submitted to this House, from the foundation of the Government to the present moment, any considerable revision of the rules which had not first been considered by a committee of the House and then submitted with a printed report of that committee—and usually, also, with a minority report—setting forth in each instance the old rule, the alleged mischief, and the proposed remedy.

Here we have thrust upon us, without any such report or explanation and without even any opportunity to read them, a body of rules which most of us have been permitted to see for the first time this morning, and which we must, under the special rule, take up at once for passage. We are graciously permitted two hours for discussion, not time enough even to read these rules, and then we must vote for or against them as a whole, being denied the privilege of offering a single amendment. Is this "the free and untrammeled expression of the representatives of the people" which the country has been taught to believe the Democrats would permit when they got control of this House? I call attention to the proposed Rule XXI. It is our rule plus what is styled the Holman amendment. Away back in the early days there obtained in this body the practice of "log rolling" and passing all kinds of legislation by riders upon appropriation bills. It was found to be absolutely destructive of good order, good government, and economy, and it was abolished. The rule finally adopted, in force in the last Congress and many previous Congresses, made it out of order for the committee to report or for anybody to suggest as an amendment any provision changing existing law or providing for an appropriation without previous authority of law.

That rule, which has saved the Government so many millions of dollars, was contained in Rule XXI of the Rules of the Sixty-first Congress in this language:

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order.

That was the result of the wisdom and experience of both parties for more than a century. Our Democratic friends now propose to readopt that language, with the following addition:

Except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

That addition, known as the Holman amendment, has been tried heretofore and found to work so badly that it was eliminated and rejected in a Democratic House presided over by Speaker Carlisle. Now you propose to reenact it.

It has been found to be absolutely essential to good and economical government that appropriation bills shall be stripped of all provisions except appropriations, and that the Appropriations Committee shall be stripped of all power except the power to report appropriations. This amendment to the rules will place that committee in charge of pretty near all the legislation of this House. It will enable appropriations to be made without previous authority of law for their expenditure, and it will permit existing law to be changed upon appropriation bills.

It is urged that appropriation bills will be subject only to such amendments as are germane. Well, in these great appropriation bills, containing, some of them, a hundred different subjects, almost anything is germane that anybody may choose to offer. That is to say, an amendment upon almost any subject may be so skillfully drawn as to be germane to a general appropriation bill.

Let me give you a few illustrations of the operation of this Holman amendment when it was heretofore in force.

Speaker Kerr, of Indiana, a Democratic Speaker, presiding over a Democratic House, ruled that a proposition to transfer the Bureau of Indian Affairs from the Department of the Interior to the War Department was germane to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. William L. Wilson, that distinguished Democrat from West Virginia, presiding as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, ruled that a proposition to transfer the Pension Office from the Interior Department to the War Department was germane to a general appropriation bill.

On another occasion—and I wish particularly to call attention to this—when in the Post Office appropriation bill an item was reached appropriating $9,500,000 for the transportation of the mails, an amendment was offered reducing it to $9,400,000, but adding "of which sum $150,000 may be used by the Postmaster General to maintain and secure from railroads necessary and special facilities for the postal service." Here is an illustration of economy which may be expected under the operation of this Holman amendment. There was upon the face of the amendment a reduction of $10,000 in the amount of the appropriation. Speaker Carlisle ruled that the amendment was germane and was in order, although there was no previous authority for the expenditure of the $150,000. Under that amendment, adopted by a Democratic Congress, under the operation of the Holman rule, there was fastened upon this Government a system of mail subsidies to certain railroads which we did not get rid of for nearly thirty years, and under the operation of it two or three railroad companies drew out of the Federal Treasury nearly five millions of dollars, not one cent of which they ever could have secured except for the operation of the so-called Holman amendment, and for not one cent of which did the Government or the people ever derive the slightest benefit.

The authority of law for the railroad mail subsidy having thus been secured, appropriations for subsequent years could be made without any reduction in the total appropriation. The amount of the mail subsidy was simply added to what would otherwise have been the total of the general appropriation, and the Government was out of pocket just that much money. This Holman rule can be made to operate in that way in a thousand different directions when it has been adopted as one of the rules of the present House. That is the way it will work, and yet it has been heralded to the four corners of the country as a great instrumentality in bringing about the economies which our Democratic brethren say they are about to enforce.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal about the dismissal of certain employees whose salaries aggregate about $182,000. Their places, we are told, are to be left vacant. No resolution or bill has been offered abolishing those places. They are still authorized by law, but the Republicans who held them have been or will be promptly dismissed. The offices, however, remain, and it is a safe prediction that in less than 90 days from this date every one of them will be filled by a lusty Democratic political worker. So much for the insincerity of that pretended economy.

This Holman rule, skillfully worked, can be made to cover almost any kind of extravagance and permit appropriations for a thousand objects for which there is now no authority of law and which could not now be made without the previous enactment of a separate measure authorizing such expenditure. Its operation will not be in the interest of economy at all. Any amendment reducing an appropriation is now and always has been in order without any Holman rule. The object of it is to accomplish some other purpose upon an appropriation bill. It is the height of insincerity to hold out to the public that its adoption is in the interest of economy. Adopt it, and after less than one year of its operation the people of this country may well exclaim, "Oh, economy, what wrongs have been done in thy name." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The object and the effect of this Holman rule will be to lessen the importance of the other committees and vastly enlarge the importance of the Appropriations Committee by putting all kinds of general legislation within its authority. "Upon the report of the committee" any germane amendment is to be in order. What committee? Why, the Appropriations Committee. It may report as an amendment a matter that might properly come from the Judiciary Committee, or the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, or any other of the great committees, and yet it will be in order upon a general appropriation bill. The Appropriations Committee appropriates nearly a billion of dollars every year. This power of appropriation gives it a wonderful command in the House. Add to that the power of general legislation, and instead of bowing to the Speaker for favors everybody will have to kow tow to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. With the power to give or withhold appropriations used as a big stick Members may be clubbed into the support of any matter of general legislation which that committee may choose to report.

In the last House, the Republicans being in control, the Speaker appointed 11 Republicans upon that committee. In this Congress, the Democrats being in control, propose to take 14 places on that committee.

Upon the whole, so far as I have had time to read this set of rules which is to be forced upon us without the power of even offering an amendment, I wish to be perfectly frank and candid and say that, with the exception of this Holman amendment and one or two other changes, it is not a bad set of rules. It is practically a reenactment of the same rules which we adopted in the recent Republican House. Such changes as have been made in this set of Democratic rules have been either unnecessary or unwise. As a sample of the unnecessary I point to Rule X. In its new form it reads there, "shall be elected by the House" the standing committees. The old rule provided that they were to be appointed by the Speaker "unless otherwise authorized by the House." It was not necessary to change that rule. It has always been permissible under Republican rules for the House to make the committee assignments if a majority so desired. All you had to do was to adopt a motion to that effect. Many years ago, when committee places were assigned otherwise than by the Speaker, the result was unsatisfactory. Whether it will work better now remains to be seen. Whether a better adjustment of committee assignments can be made by a Democratic caucus than by yourself, Mr. Speaker CLARK, with your long service, your familiarity with the work required of the respective committees, and of the qualifications of Members for such work, may well be doubted. Personally, I should be more than willing to leave the selection in your hands.

One of the first results of the new plan appears to be that in order to effect a sort of compromise and satisfy the Democratic aspirants it has been found necessary to make 35 new committee places; and it has been found necessary to so far depart from the "square-deal" principle that you allow only one of those 35 places to be filled by a Republican. I am not unwilling that you shall try the experiment of having the committees appointed otherwise than by the Speaker, although I believe that the making of the appointments by him would tend to wiser selection and better results in legislation. There are, however, a good many gentlemen upon this floor who not only believe that the Speaker ought not to have the power of appointment, but they also believe that these appointments ought not to be determined in a party caucus. They think that there ought to be appointed or elected by the House a committee on committees, to consist of Members of both parties, the majority party, of course, having a majority of the committee. Such a committee, after meeting in conference, these gentlemen think, would bring about the most satisfactory results of all. But you do not give them a chance to offer such an amendment and have it voted upon.

I heard a Democratic Member of this House, when discussing the Republican rules, say:

> Give these Representatives their rights upon this floor. Let every man have the privilege to rise in his place to present what he chooses for the consideration of this House, and then let that matter be disposed of by a free and untrammeled expression of the representatives of the people.

That same honorable gentleman is one of the men assigned for duty on the Ways and Means Committee, delegated to prepare and submit to the Democratic caucus the assignments to places on all the other committees. That same gentleman has just voted for the previous question, which deprived us of an opportunity for "a free and untrammeled expression" or any expression at all upon the adoption of the special rule under which we are now proceeding, which rule requires us to vote for or against the adoption of this body of 43 rules without the poor privilege of any Member to rise in his place and present even the smallest amendment, or any amendment whatever, "to be disposed of by a free and untrammeled expression of the representatives of the people."

The platform adopted by the Democratic national convention at Denver demanded a change in the rules and regulations of this House. Through the press, by means of campaign literature, and upon the stump, the people were led to believe that there was something terribly wrong about the rules of this House, which made it impossible for every Member to get every bill passed that he or his people wanted. They were led to believe that if your party got in power you would bring about some great reforms. Now, what do you propose to do? Why, simply to reenact the Republican rules, with a few unwise changes, the worst of which is the readoption of the Holman amendment. Indeed, if that were omitted, and you had allowed opportunity for discussion and amendment, I should not be complaining. I do not now so much complain of what you propose to do as of the manner in which you are doing it. You have held out to the people through all these years that Republican rules and Republican majorities were arbitrary and despotic, that free debate was not allowed, and that Members were given no freedom of action. Now let us make a little comparison. The so-called Reed rules wrought only about four important changes in the rules as they had previously existed.

The revision made at that time was first considered by the Committee on Rules. It was then submitted to the House with two reports from that committee, a majority report and a minority report, each of which discussed minutely each proposed change, and the two reports together gave every argument that could possibly be made either for or against the changes. Then the proposed new rules were read in the House and were debated for three days. They were then read again, paragraph by paragraph, under the five-minute rule, and any Member on either side of the House who desired to offer an amendment had an opportunity to do so. It was only at the end of the third day that the final vote was taken. What have you done? You have brought in a set of 43 rules. They have not even been read from the Clerk's desk. This side is allowed two hours to discuss them. No one on either side is permitted to offer or will have an opportunity to vote upon any amendment. It is no answer to say that in other cases in matters of legislation Republican majorities may have been arbitrary and drastic. You have condemned those things. You have preached to the people about them. You have told what you would do when you got in power. I wish merely to expose the insincerity of your promises and to contrast them with this present performance. I wish merely to call the attention of the country to the fact that in the matter of stifling debate, in the matter of depriving the people's representatives of an opportunity to present by way of amendment matters in which they or their constituents may be interested, in short, in all those things of which you have heretofore so loudly complained you have within the first 24 hours after your accession to power made the Democratic little finger thicker than the Republican thigh ever was. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Would the gentleman from Illinois prefer to go on with another speech on his side now?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that we have occupied nearly twice as much time as the gentleman has.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have never agreed to the political heresy of the poet that—

> For forms of government let fools contest;
> That which is best administered is best.

but I have been impressed with the fact that it contains something of truth by the criticisms offered here to-day to the rules proposed by the majority.

The American people are a practical people, and as a practical people they will judge this side of the House as they have judged that side of the House—not by the intricacies of parliamentary law, but by the results that follow from the administration of the power given to us as a party.

This is still a country that is governed by and through parties. The day may come when the speech of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] may be logical and proper, but that day has not yet come.

Having then party government, it is to my mind entirely logical and proper that the party here charged with responsibility should present as a party the rules that it considers necessary to enable it to properly discharge that responsibility. And equally should the minority party present its proposition touching procedure. In presenting its rules, the majority must pay proper heed to the rights of the minority and to the rights of the individual Member, and if it fails to do so, to that extent it abuses its power and is censurable. It is the province of the minority to make clear such abuse by criticism and to prevent it, if possible, by offering a substitute proposition remedying such evils. But that the majority in assuming control is properly subject to criticism in not affording each Member of the House opportunity to express his individual views and to offer individual amendments embodying them I do not admit.

I have never stood in this House as the advocate of extreme rule on the part of the majority. I believe civilization is measured by the rights that are secured to a minority, no matter how small. But I believe that in a legislative body like this, when we of the majority present to you of the minority the opportunity to present a code of rules that you consider should be adopted as against ours, we have done all that can be asked of us in fairness.

Much is said about this being the adoption of a new code of rules, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] undertakes to draw a fanciful distinction, so far as the rights of the minority are concerned, between Congresses that represent a change of party control from the prior Congress and those that do not—a distinction that I am quite sure exists only in the gentleman's mind. We present here not an entirely new set of rules, but we present a set of rules that undertakes in two major particulars to change the rules that have been known as Republican rules, and which until recently have controlled the House. One change has been in taking away from the Speaker the power of appointing committees. Another rule, and to my mind a very much more far-reaching rule, is that which takes away from committees the power to stifle legislation. The complaints that we have had, as I have pointed out heretofore, have not been so much as to the personnel of committees as they have been to the power of committees, and you do not change personnel necessarily, though you do sometimes, by changing method of selection, but you do afford a great relief by changing the power of committees. We have provided here a rule whereby a committee may be discharged from the consideration of legislation when, in the opinion of the House, it is not considering that legislation in good faith or desirous of reporting it.

Personally, I should have liked a rule not only discharging committees but one enabling the majority using it to make preferential the bill taken from the committee. I embodied my view in the proposed rule introduced by me in the last Congress and which served as a basis for the rule now offered. It is believed by many that this rule is all that is necessary, and until experience shall prove to the contrary, I am willing to abide by it. If this rule works as it is intended, we will have given real liberty to the House. If it does not work as intended, I for one shall favor an enlargement of it so that it will work that way.

Much criticism has been made of the Holman amendment because it gives to the House the power to legislate on appropriation bills. I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] that when the House surrendered its power, under proper circumstances, to put legislation upon appropriation bills, it surrendered what has been the greatest instrument in favor of the liberties of the English-speaking people since the time that parliamentary government was established. It was in England that the House of Commons, by putting conditions upon the supply bills of the King, gained for the people their greatest liberties and rights; and a Democratic Congress, confronted with a Republican President, confronted with the other branch of the National Legislature in control of the opposite party, can well afford to give to itself such power as will enable it to enforce those demands which it believes to be in the interest of the people, whose mandate it so recently bears. [Applause.] It may be that a party having control of every branch of the Government need not have this rule; but speaking for myself, I am glad that the majority of this House will be in a position to make its voice actually felt by those other branches whose cooperation is essential to legislation in this Government.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.

Mr. CULLOP. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the criticism made on the adoption of these rules by the opposite side of the House is not all remedied in the opportunity they have under the rule to offer a substitute to liberalize or amend the rules as they may desire?

Mr. SHERLEY. As I have said, in my judgment ample right is given to the minority in that particular.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to ask whether I correctly infer from what the gentleman said that if his party had control of all branches of the Government, he would not be in favor of the so-called Holman amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is drawing an inference of his own; but this I do say to him, that the fact that we have not such control is one of the warrants for the rule. If that be treason, the gentleman is welcome to make the most of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OLMSTED. It is the same thing that I inferred.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, we have had some suggestions made here as to amendments, though none of the seriously proposed amendments are embodied in the substitute offered by the minority leader, Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] complains bitterly of the condition in which he finds himself, and he suggests various rules that he thinks would improve the present proposed rules. He suggests that instead of the one master we were supposed to have when the Speaker appointed the committees we should have 15 masters, arranged by geography. If I am to have a master at all, I would rather have 1 than 15, because I could at least place responsibility. The Democrats, in arranging that the committees should not be appointed by the Speaker, did not give into the hands of 15 men the power to name those committees. They have used a committee in the preliminary arrangement of proposed committee membership in this House, but these rules provide that actual membership on committees shall be determined by the House itself. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I was surprised that the gentleman from Nebraska, who would have us view him as the embodiment of all progress and reform, is so willing to create 15 masters from whose decision there would be no appeal. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He also criticized the rules of the House because we did not provide for open meetings of all committees. In my judgment no man who has ever served upon any great committee of this House but knows that the enforcement of such a rule would benefit no one, but would result in great delay and great hindrance of the public business. Such a rule is predicated on the idea that Members of Congress are not honest men, and that unless the flood light of publicity is always turned upon every movement of theirs they will be guilty of wrongdoing.

I am not willing to admit such a contention as to myself, and I am not willing to believe it of my colleagues. I do not believe that the membership of this House is composed of cowards, and I do not believe that the people's cause has suffered because of holding our committee meetings as we have held them.

The trouble has been not in the discussion of committee members among themselves, but it has been the fact that heretofore there has been no way for the majority of the House to compel a committee to report. Such a method was imperative for the liberty of this House, and I believe we have provided for it; and having provided for it, we have answered all the just criticisms that could be brought against the rules.

In the past eight years I have not indulged in undue criticism; I have not undertaken to criticise the majority simply because they were the majority. I have always put to the test every rule—was it fair to the minority and to the majority?—without reference to which side I happened to be on. I believe that that is the only test, and I am willing here in my place to-day to say that the proposed rules of the House give at present ample liberty to the Members, and I believe that it depends largely upon the membership as to how far they will have freedom. Many restrictions have been placed upon membership here because men have not been willing to restrain themselves. If every Member will undertake to enforce these rules in the true spirit of their enactment, we will not have any just cause, in my judgment, to complain.

Now, something has been said about the failure to provide a way to discharge the Committee on Rules. There is some force in the criticism, but bear in mind that the Committee on Rules does not have referred to it propositions of legislation. They only have referred to it questions relating to procedure. Now, if you have actually and effectively provided a method whereby legislation can be brought forward before the House, any further question of procedure becomes of very much less importance. It is not near so important that the Committee on Rules should be subject to a motion to discharge as it is that the various legislative committees should be so subject.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman state how many resolutions were referred to the Rules Committee at the last Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not.

Mr. MILLER. Was there not over a thousand?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know and I do not think it is material. I will tell the gentleman why I do not think it is material. I do not suppose there were anything like a thousand; but if there were a thousand it was because it was only through the agency of the Committee on Rules that you could legislate at times. But if we have remedied the major complaint we do not need to be bothered by a secondary remedy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We can go directly to the matter.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a second question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Irrespective of the number of resolutions referred to that committee in the last Congress, is it not true that at least nine-tenths of the resolutions referred to that committee related to investigations and were entirely distinct from matters of procedure?

Mr. SHERLEY. I should say not; but under the rules of the House there were many resolutions relating to departments, most of them resolutions of inquiry, privileged under the rules.

Mr. Speaker, it has been impossible in the time that was at my disposal to deal exhaustively with a subject as comprehensive and intricate as that of the rules, but I have endeavored in candor and fairness to present the major propositions here involved. Speaking for myself, and, as I believe, voicing the opinion of my party colleagues, I say that we have in good faith presented a code of rules that has proper regard for the rights of the two major parties and of the individual Members, and if defects in these rules become apparent in the actual test of experience under them, the majority will gladly and sincerely provide the changes necessary to accomplish this end. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is much that I can add to what has already been said about these rules. In my judgment some very valuable additions have been made to the rules that have been adopted by former Congresses. Especially this is so, I think, with reference to the rule which we have changed regarding the discharge of committees. Under that rule, if it works out the way we believe it will, there will be an opportunity for Members to get bills on the calendar which the country demands, and when those bills are put upon the calendars it then will be an easy matter, if the bill be demanded by the country, to have it taken up for consideration. Many rules which Members sometimes use or might use for the purpose of stifling legislation ought not to be used when the people demand certain legislation against which those rules might apply. I believe that with the adoption of these rules, and as one member of the Committee on Rules I desire to say——

Mr. MANN. There is no Committee on Rules.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Well, there will be; and when that committee is appointed, if I am a member, I desire to say that I believe a majority of the members of that committee will be willing at all times to consider any resolution that is for the good government of this House. I will say this, that the people have spoken, and they have demanded that certain legislation shall be put in effect by this Congress, and I believe that these rules which you are asked to adopt will be such as will enable this side of the House to put into operation the laws that the people have demanded for their relief.

I think the rule, which was an old rule of the Fifty-third Congress, that will enable an amendment to be placed upon an appropriation bill when it retrenches expenditures, if the amendment be germane to the subject, making that amendment in order, is a very important rule to the House of Representatives, as it will enable the Members whenever it is necessary to cut down expenses. We have seen the time in the last Congress when a recommendation had been made to do away with a certain item in a bill, and because that item was authorized by law, although it was a ruthless expense on the Government, it was impossible to get the item out of the appropriation bill, because it sometimes affected the districts of the individual Members and was perhaps demanded by some particular part of the country. Under this rule no man can make a point of order upon that sort of an amendment to an appropriation bill.

It has also been provided by these rules that any Member who has a bill upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, if it is once objected to, may have an opportunity to again place that bill upon the calendar and at some future time to ask its consideration. It occurs to me that this is but fair and right to Members who desire to pass bills by unanimous consent.

The rule providing the way bills affecting the revenue shall be considered in this House is also an important one. It seems to be the settled policy of the majority party of this House to revise the tariff by amending one schedule at a time. This way of revising the tariff was advocated a good many years ago by a Representative from the State of Illinois, Hon. William M. Springer.

President Taft became a convert to this Democratic form of revision after the passage of the Payne-Aldrich bill, and there was published in the Republican campaign textbook of 1910 a letter written by the President to Hon. Duncan E. McKinlay, of California, in which he uses the following language in reference to the passage of bills through Congress revising the tariff by schedule and the kind of rule that should be adopted. He says:

> Of course, this will be impracticable unless Congress itself shall adopt the parliamentary rule, as I hope it will, that a bill to amend one schedule of the tariff may not be subject to a motion to amend by adding changes in other schedules.

It occurs to me that the Members on the other side of this House have little cause of complaint of such a rule being passed at this time. One of the greatest reforms of the rules of the Sixty-first Congress was made when the Democrats combined with a minority of the Republicans and elected a Committee on Rules and provided that the Speaker should not be a member of that committee.

These rules which are now before the House for action go further, and provide that all standing committees of the House, together with the chairman, shall be elected by the Members of the House, thus taking away from the Speaker the power to form these committees with any reference to control legislation, and putting in the hands of the membership of this House the control of its committees and say what Members shall constitute those committees. The country has demanded that these reforms should be made in the rules, and the Democratic Party, in keeping faith with the people, have endeavored to carry out their will. These rules I have no doubt will permit the will of the people to be carried out if it is so desired by the membership of this House. It should be the object of a legislative body as constituted by representatives of the people to endeavor to enact such legislation as is demanded by a majority as near as possible. Relief from excessive taxation and an economical administration of the affairs of this Government have been demanded, and it is the duty of this House to carry out this mandate. As Representatives we would be recreant to our duty if we failed to do these things. The Democratic Party of this House proposes to give fair discussion to all matters proposed, but they do not intend that filibustering for the purpose of defeating legislation that a majority of the people have demanded shall be permitted. There have been other changes in these rules which, in our judgment, we believe will work well. I have every reason to believe that if any amendments are necessary for the proper regulation and to secure the orderly procedure in this House that the rules will be so amended as to carry out the wishes of a majority of the Members and of the country. It should be the duty of the Committee on Rules to give free and fair hearing to all matter proposed. The Rules Committee will not be a graveyard where propositions for the good government of the House can be laid away. This side of the House has offered to the minority an opportunity to propose a substitute for these rules and an opportunity to put every Member on record as to his vote on these two propositions as now proposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JAMES in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I believe the proposed rules are, in the main, an improvement over the rules of the Sixty-first Congress, but they fall far short of what should be embodied in the rules governing this body. For a number of years there has been upon this side of the House a little group of Republicans called "insurgents," who have been fighting for freedom in this House—freedom of debate, freedom of amendment—and during those many contests they have had almost the unanimous support of the Democratic minority. What is the situation before us to-day? You have adopted a resolution as drastic in effect, as subversive of freedom in this House as any resolution that has ever been adopted in the House of Representatives. Were you sincere two years ago when you protested against this very kind of a proceeding? If you were, are you sincere this afternoon when you stand for the same kind of a proceeding? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] said, in the first place, that a distinction was made with reference to this resolution because it was a party measure, and, later, he said that a distinction should be made because it was a caucus measure. All of the old Members will recall that two years ago during the special session the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] stood in this aisle beside my desk and condemned caucus rule, condemned the action of the Republican majority in preventing amendments upon the tariff bill, and do you remember how he pictured so graphically the Members going into a caucus and having their hands manacled? I would like to have the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] hold up his hands this afternoon for inspection of this House, and tell us how he likes being manacled. If we had an opportunity to offer some amendments, they would be adopted by this House, and the reason that you have denied the opportunity for amendment is that you do not dare trust your own majority to stand by these rules when improvements may be offered to them from this side.

I want to speak of one or two such amendments. You all remember during the last session of Congress calendar Wednesday was entirely done away with through a defect of the rule; that a committee secured the consideration of a bill upon calendar Wednesday and held the floor during the balance of that session until the consideration of that bill was completed——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I will when I finish this sentence. The gentleman from Pennsylvania secured consideration of the judicial codification bill, and every Wednesday during that session was taken up by that bill when many more important measures remained upon the calendar and failed for want of action.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Could not the House on calendar Wednesday have ended that by a majority vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois has 35 minutes and the gentleman from Texas 37 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON].

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of replying to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I want to tell him why it was impossible to pass a motion to lay aside the codification bill, or Moon bill, as it was called. It was because there were so many men here who knew that there were other bills which would come up on calendar Wednesday that would embarrass them to vote upon them, and they did not want to face those embarrassing situations.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MADISON. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not that simply another way of saying that the majority preferred the Moon bill to something else?

Mr. MADISON. No; it is not. If this rule remains as it is proposed to have it, then, as in the past, calendar Wednesday can and will be used for the purpose of blocking legislation and affording a refuge for men who do not care to face questions that ought to come up before this House for consideration. [Applause.] I deplore the fact, as one of the few men who stood here on this side during the recent Congress for the liberation of this House, that my friends on the other side, who have now come into possession of this House, and who have the opportunity to completely revise and reform its rules, have not improved their opportunity and have not risen to the high standard that the country expected of them in the system of rules they now propose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been agreeably surprised by hearing so little of criticism from gentlemen on the other side of the aisle of the rules that are presented. It is exceedingly gratifying to find it so, and I am constrained to believe that it may be possible, judging from the lack of criticism which has come from that side of the aisle, that the reading of the rules as presented may have been another of those disappointments that have been so frequently coming to that side of the aisle recently growing out of the fact that the Democratic Party was showing itself able to do the business of the country. It is very gratifying, Mr. Speaker, for a different reason, and that is that there is not a suggestion in such criticisms that have been offered that there is in the code of rules proposed here a single proposition unfair to the minority, whether it be the political minority or the legislative minority of this House. I assume, therefore, that the lack of criticism in that respect must indicate that they have found in these rules nothing that is unfair to the minority as a minority. It is true there has been a suggestion on the floor that there was a certain unfairness in the enlargement of committees or rather in the manner in which that enlargement was to be made, but that criticism does not go to the rules themselves. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. In the early part of the debate the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] made an inquiry, with regard to Rule VI, page 28, as to business on the Private Calendar, and he was informed that later in the debate the matter would be discussed. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the new rule, which seems to me to be so drafted that it would not be possible, if experience of the future shall be that of the past, to reach private legislation or legislation on the Private Calendar other than legislation coming from the Committees on Claims and War Claims, and from the Committee on Military Affairs touching the removal of charges of desertion. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Committee on Public Lands, the Committees on Military Affairs and on Naval Affairs are committees reporting a large amount of legislation that goes on the Private Calendar. In the 14 years I have been in the House there never has been a time when that class of legislation could be reached under this rule, for there never has been a time when the private bills on the Private Calendar from these other committees have all been disposed of.

Mr. GARRETT. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the bills from the other calendars not being disposed of. The effect of this rule, I will say to the gentleman, is this: That it gives to this character of business coming from those two committees the same privilege that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has heretofore had, and with that character of privilege there will be such an expedition of that business that it will be easy to reach the claims to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MONDELL. If my memory serves me right, and I have made some inquiries, in the last seven Congresses the legislation on the Private Calendar from these preferred committees has never all been disposed of, and therefore other legislation coming from the Public Lands Committee, from the Military and Naval Committees, could not have been reached under this form of rule.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty has been that this business coming from these two committees has been permitted to accumulate on the calendars in such quantities that it was not possible to deal with it in the limited time allowed under the rule to these committees. There has not been a day during the entire session of Congress, at times, that these committees have had a chance, because they have not the privilege. They have the privilege now and can deal with the business. I think the gentleman will not find practical difficulty about that; but, if that should be, it is a minor detail, which can be, of course, corrected.

Mr. DALZELL. I think there is a much more serious criticism to be made than that made by the gentleman from Wyoming. Under all the rules that have existed heretofore, both Democratic and Republican, Friday has been set apart for private business. In other words, to get rid of private business you would have to have an affirmative vote of the House. Now, in this code of rules you have omitted that rule, and you have provided, on the other hand, that private business should be entertained when you take affirmative action, when you make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of private business.

In other words, under the rule as it existed up to this time, Friday is the day set aside for private bills automatically, unless dispensed with. Under your rule you can not have a private-bill day unless you have affirmative action on the part of the House. Suppose the House resolves to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and pass a number of bills, say, 10, 12, or 15, and reports to the House, and does not order the previous question, when will those bills come up again, or will they ever come up?

Mr. GARRETT. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he asks if the committee reports to the House and does not order the previous question, when would those bills come up again? Whenever the House chose to order the previous question. That is to say, when it would be in order to move the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. They would not come up at any time devoted to other business by the rule. Under our rules now those bills would come up again on the next calendar day.

Mr. GARRETT. That does not change the rule in that respect in any way.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly it does.

Mr. GARRETT. It does this: It places those claims in precisely the same condition that the invalid-pension claims have been placed in heretofore.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman misunderstands me. He is talking about another matter. I say that under the rules that existed up to this time, in both Democratic and Republican Congresses, Friday was private-bill day and you could not get rid of it except by vote of the House. Now, you have not a private-bill day.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; we have.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The same rule that we had before—the special order.

Mr. GARRETT. Precisely the same rule as the special order carried.

Mr. DALZELL. What rule?

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think I have answered him. The language in regard to invalid pensions is precisely the language of the standing order, and the language in regard to the war claims and claims is precisely the language of the standing order, except it gives them the privileged character that invalid pensions has had heretofore.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to know where in your code of rules you establish a private-bill day.

Mr. GARRETT. In that section——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JAMES in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I beg to congratulate the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House on the liberality of the resolution under which we are considering this code. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

To be sure, you do not throw the code open to amendment, and you do not permit it to be read, but you to provide that it shall be introduced and that it shall be voted upon. Oh, gentlemen, why do you not give an opportunity for amendment? I have not heard a single argument advanced as to why this code should not be open to amendment which would not be equally sound if it were brought forward as a reason to show that no bill of any sort should be open to amendment.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] says: "Oh, it is because this code includes every rule which the people have asked for." How does he know? I do not see anything in these rules about a committee on committees, although I know of my personal knowledge that Members on your side of the House are pledged to their constituencies to vote for a committee on committees.

I can tell you why you gentlemen do not want this bill amended. It is because your solidarity would be destroyed the moment you had to go on a record vote on that question of a committee on committees. I have never spoken on the floor of this House in behalf of that particular provision in the rules, but I know that you gentlemen do not wish to meet that question, and you are in the same position which you have accused us of being in so often. You do not dare to trust yourselves. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, this is as drastic a rule as the old rules that used to be brought in here. * * * I have taken a good part, first and last, in general debate in this House, but every time I do so it is with increased reluctance, because I have come to the conclusion that general debate very rarely changes the situation on a bill. * * * I had rather have two hours' debate, section by section, on this bill, or any other important bill, under the five-minute rule, with the privilege of offering amendments, than have eight hours of general debate. * * *

I do not know how long I shall be here, but as long as I am here I intend to fight for the right to amend every section of every great bill which comes into this House, and I do not care a straw whether the Democrats control the House or the Republicans.

I am going to maintain that proposition as far as I am individually concerned.

The last time those words were spoken in this House I find in the RECORD these words:

Applause on the Democratic side.

But not one handclap do I hear at the present moment. [Laughter on the Republican side.] For the benefit of those of you who were not in the last Congress I inform you that I am reading from the eloquent speech made by the present Speaker of the House, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Oh, gentlemen, indeed the Speaker is no longer a czar when, after the terrific battle which he promised upon these occasions, he can not command a single vote on his own side! [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, on March 15, 1909, when there was a bitter controversy over the rules, I stated that if certain amendments then proposed by me were adopted the rules would be perfectly satisfactory to me. At that time I proposed amendments to eliminate what I considered to be the glaring abuses in the procedure of the House. After an exhaustive and careful investigation it was apparent to me that the abuses in the House were not due to the rules so much as to the abuse of power in their application and enforcement.

One of the amendments which I proposed provided for the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The second provided that business in order on calendar Wednesday should not be set aside excepting by a two-thirds vote. The third provided that the right to recommit after the previous question had been ordered should be retained, and that the minority, or those in opposition to the bill, should have a preferential right to recognition in making that motion. The fourth provision was that the Committee on Rules should not report any rule which would deprive the minority or opposition of the right to move to recommit after the previous question had been ordered, or permit the setting aside of business in order on calendar Wednesday by less than a two-thirds vote.

Those amendments I then believed corrected every abuse in the procedure of the House, and the experience of the last two years has fully and completely demonstrated the accuracy of my contention.

Since then two important changes have been made in the rules. One was the elimination of the Speaker from the Committee on Rules and providing for its election by the House and the other was the so-called Motion to Discharge Calendar.

I favored the latter change, because I believed it would silence all criticism of committee designations and remove the cause of the charges that the committees of the House were packed for one or another purpose. I believed then as now that if an orderly method were provided by which bills might be taken from various committees upon the demand of a majority of the House it made no difference who appointed the committees so long as the House had complete control over its committees and opportunity to record its will in an orderly way.

These proposed rules, Mr. Speaker, retain all of the amendments proposed by me on March 15, 1909. I take it that now that the heat and passion have died out and the differences which grew up from that controversy have passed away, everybody will be willing to admit the accuracy of the statement I made at that time, that those amendments, known as the "Fitzgerald amendments," did effect useful, important, and drastic reforms in the procedure of the House, beneficial to the Members, helpful to legislation, and so satisfactory in their operation that no suggestion will be made in the near future to abandon them. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, one great satisfaction derived by me from this discussion is that no one has suggested that a single one of the reforms resulting from the "Fitzgerald amendments" be repudiated or that any of the amendments be changed in a fundamental respect.

Mr. Speaker, the rules now proposed dispose of the one other important matter regarding the rules about which there has been any controversy since March, 1909. That is the method of the selection of the committees by the House. I do not favor, and never have favored, the election of the committees. I am frank to say that, in my judgment, the power should be concentrated in the Speaker and the responsibility placed in him. I believe there should be no doubt as to the responsibility for the make-up of the committees.

But the Democrats in this House had a fair, open, and free discussion of that question in caucus. They determined otherwise than I believe most wise. As one who is a stanch advocate of party government, and I believe that the success and permanence of our institutions depends upon strong party government, I am perfectly willing to acquiesce in the determination of a majority of my party upon every question that does not involve such matters of principle upon which I could not conscientiously surrender my convictions to act in concert with others. This is not such a question. And so I am supporting the proposed rules with this change, providing for the election of the committees by the House, and taking the power to appoint them away from the Speaker.

These rules, however, go further. They provide that the chairman of the various committees shall be elected, so as to do away with the criticism that the Speaker's instruments or lieutenants are at the head of the committees having charge of the business upon the floor, to the injury of the rights of Members of the House. The provision is logical and demanded by the other change.

The rules contain another important provision. They provide that bills affecting the revenue shall not be open to amendments other than those germane to the subject matter contained in the bill. I suppose nobody upon the other side of the House will object to that change, since a Republican President has taken up and advocated the old Democratic proposition, first advanced by Mr. Springer, of Illinois, that the tariff should be revised by special bills affecting single schedules rather than in a general bill affecting all schedules of the tariff.

Mr. Speaker, the criticism indulged in by that side of the House has not been against the proposed rules, but it has been because opportunity has not been given Members upon that side to offer amendments to the rules. Personally, I should be willing to permit anyone to offer any amendment to any provision in the rules. I have always believed that any intelligent discussion of them would prevent very material changes. But no fundamental or important proposition has been suggested from that side of the House which should be incorporated in these rules; no really important change has been suggested, either to facilitate business or to protect individual Members; so that after all the criticism is merely of the form of procedure rather than the statement of a substantial grievance. The minority is given the right to propose and have voted upon, a code of rules in the form it would adopt if it were in the majority. It should have such opportunity. It is a privilege of much importance, and the order under which the House is proceeding gives such privilege. If not availed of, it will be because no really important change can be suggested.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON] regretted that we have not risen to the opportunity to strike the shackles from the Members of the House now that the opportunity is here. And yet the only amendment or proposition that he suggests should be adopted is one that would put a more powerful weapon in the hands of the majority than it ever has had in the past. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He wishes to give to this side of the House the right in Committee of the Whole on Calendar Wednesdays to close debate, to throttle the minority, and compel them to accept the good Democratic legislation which shall be on the calendars during this Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It gives me the greatest pleasure to learn that there are a number of gentlemen on that side of the House so convinced that this side intends to legislate for the benefit of the entire people that they are begging us to enact drastic rules to force such legislation down their throats and compel them to accept it even against their will. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] But the adoption of the proposed change would not be beneficial, but very harmful. Gentlemen either forget or do not know that one of the most important reasons for many of the proposed rules, as well as those which have been in force in the past, is to prevent the majority exercising its power in a drastic, tyrannical, and unjust manner. To adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas would be to give the majority a power I should deplore if in the minority; and so I am unwilling to have it in the majority.

It is not true, as has been several times asserted, that the order under which the House is proceeding is the most drastic ever adopted by the House. Gentlemen on that side of the House known as insurgents joined the regulars and voted for a rule for the consideration of the postal savings bank bill which deprived the House of the right to appeal from the Speaker, whom they had denounced so viciously on so many previous occasions, merely because the bill happened to be one they favored. I have never been able to understand how the insurgent Republicans, after denouncing the Speaker of the House as a czar, as they had done so repeatedly, were willing to vote for a rule which would prevent even an insurgent Republican appealing from any decision which might be made by him during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, criticism has been made of the Holman rule, which is incorporated in the proposed rules. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] referred to the fact that under the operation of that rule provisions were inserted in an appropriation bill in 1879, if I be not mistaken, by which the entire Federal supervisory election law was repealed, and yet he failed to recall that the Federal supervisory election law was enacted and placed on the statute books in the very same way, by being incorporated in an appropriation bill on June 10, 1872. It was the necessity of the situation which compelled the Democrats to get rid of that infamous measure, and they adopted the same method as had been adopted in order to enact it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Few Democrats will be worried by such an argument against the reviving of the rule. How shall expenditures exceeding a thousand million dollars a year be curtailed unless some method be devised by which wasteful expenditures, when found, may be eliminated? Those familiar with the parliamentary history of our Government, and who have given consideration to the existing political conditions, realize the necessity of utilizing the appropriation bills as the vehicles in which imperative reforms must be carried.

The complaint that was made 30 years ago, let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, was not so much as to the usefulness and the operation of the Holman rule, but because of the condition that existed in the House prior to 1885, and which does not exist at this time.

Prior to 1885 the jurisdiction over all the appropriation bills was centered in the Committee on Appropriations. Those bills were so manipulated that with the Holman rule in force other committees having general legislative jurisdiction were deprived of an opportunity to be heard in the House, because legislation beyond the scope and intention of the rules was continually incorporated in all the appropriation bills.

Conditions now are different. The Military Committee has charge of the Army appropriation bill, the Naval Committee has charge of the naval appropriation bill, the Post Office Committee has charge of the Post Office appropriation bill, the Indian Committee has charge of the Indian appropriation bill, the Foreign Affairs Committee has charge of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, the Agriculture Committee has charge of the Agriculture appropriation bill. These committees not only have control of the appropriations for those various services, but they have jurisdiction of the legislation for the departments which expend the money. They should be given an opportunity in this coming Congress to demonstrate to the country the sincerity of this side of the House to cut out all useless and wasteful expenditure of the public money, and in this way alone, considering the political complexion of other branches of the Government, can it be done. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, two years ago the Democratic Party and the insurgent or progressive Republicans stood for a change of the rules of this House. What was the change that we demanded? We demanded that the power of the Speaker to control the legislation of this House should be taken away from him. We recognized that as long as the Speaker of the House of Representatives had in his hands the power of recognition for private bills that each Member desired to put through, as long as he had the power to make up and absolutely control the Committee on Rules of this House, as long as he had the power to appoint the standing committees of this House, he had within his control as Speaker absolute power over the legislation of the American people. Against that power and against the exercise of it by the Speaker of the House of Representatives the Democratic Party made its protest. Against that power the progressive Republicans joined with us and made their protest. Now that was all there was in the fight. There was nothing else contemplated in the fight of two years ago, and to-day, in these rules that are presented by the Democratic Party for the action of this House, every pledge and every promise that was made has been carried out by the Committee on Rules. [Applause on Democratic side.] What more can you ask; what more can your constituency ask? The power to run this House is to-day placed in the hands of the Members of the House. You elect a Committee on Rules that by your votes under a privileged motion you can discharge if they drop the legislation that the majority of the House desires.

Mr. MANN. Where is that provision?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Committee on Rules will be elected, when the proper time comes, by the membership of this House. They then become the officers of this House. It has never been questioned that it is the privileged right of any Member of this House to rise and move to turn any officer of this House out of his place, and I say that the same power will exist as to every committee of this House when these rules are adopted, and we elect them from the floor of the House instead of having them appointed by the Speaker. So that I say, that when you adopt these rules the power to control legislation in the House of Representatives is absolutely placed in the majority of this House, whether it be a partisan majority or not.

I have heard some gentlemen complain to-day that the right of absolute amendment has not been given here; that we have given four hours for general debate, and only propose to allow one substitute to be offered. Why, if that objection comes from the gentlemen on that side of the House who stand behind the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, and the position that he took two years ago, I have to say to them that two years ago when a real majority of this House desired to amend the rules they were not given the opportunity to offer a substitute. If it comes from the gentlemen who acted with us, the progressive or insurgent Republicans, I desire to call their attention to the fact that when we united to try and force an amendment of the rules two years ago, they recognized, and we recognized, that you could not amend a set of rules out on the floor of the House. And why? Because we did not propose, then, to bring the rules into the House for general amendment, recognizing that it required special attention to every word that you write in the rules and every paragraph that goes into the rules in order that business may be orderly conducted on the floor of the House; but they proposed, and we proposed, to elect a special Committee on Rules and give them the authority to revise the rules and report back to this House at the December session. So that every Republican who stood with us at that time recognized the impossibility of going into a general amendment of the rules on the floor. He recognized the necessity of having the changes of those rules carefully worked out by a committee.

Now, to-day we are going to do what you did not do two years ago or four years ago or six years ago, or since I have been a Member of this Congress. We are going to give you an opportunity absolutely to present to the House and to the country an entire change of rules from what we have proposed, to suit yourself. If you do not like the changes we have made in these rules, your leader can strike them out. He can present them to the House as he sees fit. He can have an absolutely fair vote and a roll call on his proposition, that we have been denied ever since I have been a Member of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We have demonstrated to the country in the past two years and to-day that we wanted the representatives of the American people to control the legislation in this House. We have presented to you a set of rules by which the Speaker can no longer control the legislation of this House, where an opportunity will be given to any man that has a majority of this House behind him to write the law on the statute books that his constituency and the American people stand for. Can you ask for more than that? We do not say we will stop here. The Rules Committee is to be elected by this House. They are subject to be dethroned by this House. It is open to every Member of this House to go before them and present any proposition that he sees fit looking to a change of the rules. There is no man who has the right to assume to-day that that committee will not give him a fair hearing. There is no man who has the right to assume that that committee will not be responsive to the will of the majority of the representatives of the American people. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I compliment and congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] and those behind him upon the resolution which he has presented providing for the rules of this House in this Congress. After all the cry which has resounded throughout the country for years, increasing in volume until it had affected a congressional election, after the people had been persuaded from one end of the land to the other that the old rules of the House were rules of tyranny and not suitable for rules for a free people, the rules now proposed by the Democratic majority are substantially the rules of the last Republican House of Representatives.

There are 240 paragraphs in the rules as now proposed, and nearly all of these are identical in language with the rules which were in force while my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was the Speaker. Most of the actual changes which have been made relate to the committees.

It is proposed by these rules to abolish six of the committees of the House as they have existed for many years and to concentrate the power previously exercised by those committees in the other committees. We have had for many years a Committee on the Militia, which rendered important service and gave special study to the subjects relating to the National Guard. You propose to abolish that committee and concentrate its power in the already powerful Committee on Military Affairs.

You propose to abolish the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, which has existed for many years, and to concentrate its power in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

You propose to abolish the long-standing Committee on Pacific Railroads, which has rendered most important service in connection with Government-aided transcontinental railroads, and concentrate its power in the Committee on Railways and Canals.

With the same ruthless disregard of the manufacturing interests of the country, which leads you to oppose the American protective system, you propose to entirely abolish the Committee on Manufactures.

These changes are not in the interest of individual freedom in the House, but tend to the further concentration of power in the hands of the few. Although the committee rooms and the committee tables are now crowded with the present size of the large committees, you propose to increase the size of 15 of the leading committees of the House in order to provide additional places to satisfy the demands of your Democratic Members arising out of your new system of selecting committees through a party caucus. And in this connection, I wish to take a few moments in appealing to the Democratic side of the House to show some degree of fairness in dealing with the Republican minority as to committee assignments.

Every game must be played by fair rules, and even prize-fighters shake hands in advance and are barred from hitting below the belt. It is a rule in practice everywhere that a majority should in the preliminaries treat the minority fairly, and that has been the practice in the House, I believe, during the history of the Republic. You now propose to violate that practice.

You propose to increase the membership of 15 of the leading committees and take the increase for the majority. In the Fifty-third Congress, when the Democratic side of the House had a majority of 84, 20 more than it has in this House, although the total membership of the House was much less than it now is, you divided the great committees on the basis of 11 Democrats to 6 of the minority. With your great majority at that time you were still fair enough to give to the minority more than one-third. In this House you have a Democratic majority of 63. In the Sixtieth Congress, with a Republican majority of 58, we gave to you 7 Members to our 12 on most of these 15 committees.

In the last House, or the Sixty-first Congress, we had a majority of 47, only 16 less than you now have in this House, and we took 12 Members and gave you 7 on most of these leading committees, and on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors we took 12 and gave you 8.

You propose now to increase these 15 committees to a membership of 21 each and to take 14 and give to the Republicans only 7 on each committee. That is hitting below the belt.

Take the great Committee on Appropriations. In the Fifty-third Congress it stood 11 majority to 6 minority. That was a Democratic House. In the Fifty-fourth Congress, with a Republican majority of over 130, it stood 11 majority to 6 minority. In the Fifty-ninth Congress, with a Republican majority of 116, it stood 11 majority to 6 minority. With your majority now of 63 you propose to make it 14 Democrats to 7 Republicans.

Take the great Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In the Fifty-fourth Congress, with a Republican majority of over 130, we took 8 places and gave to the minority 5. In the Republican Fifty-sixth Congress we took 10 places and gave to the minority 7. In the last Congress we took 12 places and gave you 7. You propose now to take 14 members and give us only 7.

Take the great Committee on Agriculture. In the Democratic Fifty-third Congress you took 11 members and gave the minority 6. In the Republican Fifty-fourth Congress, with over 130 majority, we took 11 members and gave you 7. In the last Congress we took 11 members and gave you 7. You propose now to take 14 and give us 7.

Take the important Committee on Foreign Affairs. In the Fifty-third Congress, with a Democratic majority of 84, you took 9 places and gave the minority 6. In the Fifty-fourth Congress, with a Republican majority of over 130, we took 9 places and gave to the minority 6. In the Fifty-sixth Congress, with a small Republican majority, we took 10 places and gave the minority 7. In the last Congress, with a Republican majority nearly as large as you now have, we took 12 places and gave you 7. You propose now to take 14 places and give us only 7.

Take the great Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs. On each of those committees in the Democratic Fifty-third Congress, with a Democratic majority of 84, you took 9 and gave to the minority 6. In the Republican Fifty-sixth Congress we took 10 and gave to the minority 7. In the last Congress, with a Republican majority of 47, we took 12 places and gave to the Democrats 7.

In this Congress, with a Democratic majority of 63, you propose to take 14 places and give to the minority only 7.

Take the great Committee on Ways and Means. In the Fifty-third Congress, with a Democratic majority of 84, you took 11 places and gave to the minority 6. In the Fifty-fourth Congress, with a Republican majority of over 130, we took 11 places and gave to the minority 6. In the Fifty-sixth Congress, with a Republican majority, we took 10 places and gave to the minority 7. In the Sixtieth Congress, with a Republican majority of 58, we took 12 places and gave to the minority 7. In the last Congress, with a Republican majority of 47, we took 12 places and gave you 7. You now, with a Democratic majority of only 63, propose to take 14 places and give to us only 7.

Heretofore, when there has been an increase in the size of committees, that increase has usually been divided between the majority and the minority parties. You propose now to make an increase and to take the increase for yourself. I appeal to the fairness of the gentlemen on the Democratic side in the hope that you will deal fairly by the minority as to committees.

You propose to increase the membership of 15 of these leading committees to 21. Their membership is now from 17 to 20, most of them at present having a membership of 19. This increase in numbers will involve a change of the furniture of every room which is occupied by these committees. The rooms and tables are now so arranged that one member can sit at each end of the table and the others have seats along the sides, and it does not take any more room for 22 members than for 21.

You have a membership in this House of 227 and the minority has a membership of 164. If you observe the traditional spirit of fairness which has prevailed in the past, both on the Democratic and Republican sides when they have respectively been in a majority, you will be willing now to give to the minority 8 members on each of these committees to your 14.

By the rules you have proposed you have increased the membership of these 15 committees by adding 35 new members to them, and you propose to take for the majority 33 of these new places and give to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER], of the Socialist Party, one place and give to the Republican minority only one of the increased membership. You propose to take on these 15 committees 33 more places than we took when we were the majority, and give to us only one more place than we gave you when you were the minority.

You propose to abolish 6 committees which in the past have had a majority membership of 44 and a minority membership of 32. You propose to abolish, therefore, 32 minority committee places and 44 majority committee places, and add on other committees for the majority 33 new places and for the Republican minority only 1 new place. You propose to take a net loss on committee assignments of 11 places and give to the minority a net loss of 30 places.

The committees which you propose to increase in size are the Committees on Ways and Means, Appropriations, Judiciary, Banking and Currency, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Rivers and Harbors, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Agriculture, Foreign Affairs, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, the Post Office and Post Roads, Public Lands, Insular Affairs, and District of Columbia.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress there was a Republican membership of 250, and the Republicans took 179 places on these 15 committees. You now have a Democratic membership in this House of 227 and you propose to take 210 places on these 15 committees.

We all know that on most of these committees partisan questions seldom arise, and that it is just as important for the country that the minority be well represented on the committee as for the majority to be. Nor have you anything to fear in regard to numbers. If we have been able to legislate with a majority of only 11 to 7, or 12 to 7, you certainly can carry out your plans with a committee majority of 14 to 8.

COMMITTEE ON COMMITTEES.

Mr. Speaker, I understand why this unfair distribution of committee membership is now proposed. Under the rules which are now offered it is provided that the House shall elect its committees, and your side of the House heralds that as a great change of the rules. Why, sir, under the rules of the House for many years the House has had the power to elect its committees. There never has been a requirement in the rules that the Speaker appoint the committees if the House otherwise provided.

When your side of the House provided for the selection of committees by a Democratic caucus committee and caucus action it found what every party endeavoring to do the same thing will find, that it is necessary to increase the majority membership on the leading committees in order to pacify the demands which are made upon the individual members of the committee on committees in order to put your committee list through the caucus. And hence you generously provided to give to yourselves more places, but to deny them to us.

You say now that you have made a great change in the rules by providing for the election of committees. You propose, you say, to elect the committees in the House; but you do not propose to elect the committees by ballot; you do not propose to give to the individual membership of the House an opportunity to pass upon the qualifications of Members for committee assignments by either an open or secret ballot. What is the difference, pray, between having the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Democratic floor leader, rise in his place and offer a resolution providing for the election of the gentlemen he names in the resolution as members of committees, which you have already named in your caucus, and having the Speaker of the House, as you could have done, say that the Speaker appoints the following committees which you had selected by your caucus action?

The idea which went through the land as to the selection of committees by a Committee on Committees was to have a committee of the House, where both sides were represented in the committee, select the membership of the various committees. You have eliminated that. You have simply provided a different method of carrying out your caucus action, which you could have carried out under the old rule with equal facility.

Under the old method of selecting committees by the Speaker every Member of the House was given an equal opportunity of expressing his wishes and desires and explaining his qualifications for committee assignments. The Speaker became the clearing house of information on the subject. He could consider not only the wishes of Members, but the interests of the public and of legislation and the geographic interests in representation, both of the majority and of the minority.

The Democratic caucus has already adopted its membership on the committees, and in general has accepted the Democratic committee assignments which were made by Speaker CANNON and former Speakers, thereby showing that you approve on the Democratic side of the House the action of the Speakers in making assignments in the past. You have turned over the selection of the Democratic members of committees to a caucus committee of 14 Democratic Members, which for weeks has been engaged, not so much in considering qualifications and suitability as in trading among themselves, in order to take care of personal friends and factional adherents.

The Republican caucus has decided that the recommendations for Republican assignments on committees shall be made by myself as the selected minority leader. I shall give consideration in my selections to the interests of the public as well as the desires and capabilities of the Members, their length of service in the House and on the committees, and their experience and qualifications.

Your method of selecting committees will inevitably lead to committees of unwieldly size and packed for political purposes through the influence of the brute power of factional majorities. You have failed entirely to meet the sentiment of the country, which you largely worked up through misleading statements, that committees of the House should be selected through a House committee on committees, composed of both majority and minority Members.

REPUBLICAN RULES.

For years you have been denouncing the rules of a Republican House. The Republicans were in power in this House for 16 consecutive years. During that time more wise legislation of a reform and progressive nature was enacted than during any other equal period in our country's history. Under the rules of the House which were in force a membership of nearly 400 was enabled to reach those matters for consideration which the majority desired to consider without permitting a small minority to waste the time of the House considering legislation which the majority did not desire or propose to enact.

Rules of a large legislative body which enable the minority to fritter away the time only tend to prevent legislation, but the rules must provide some manner for protecting the right of the minority to be heard, both in opposition to measures which the majority proposes and in advocacy of measures which the minority propose and the majority do not take up. Such are the rules which have been in force in the past. You have denounced them as tyrannical, unworthy of free men, and subversive of individual freedom in the House. You made the country believe that our rules were rules of tyranny; that the Speaker was an autocrat and czar combined; that no bill could receive consideration in the House without first obtaining the consent of the Speaker. You have declaimed on the floor of the House and on the stump in the country that no Member in the House could be recognized to call up a bill without making previous arrangement with the Speaker; that no bill could receive consideration which the Speaker did not approve; that no bill could pass which did not bear the O. K. of the Speaker. You have frequently said on the Democratic side that the Speaker was the House and that the Members were merely attendants upon the Speaker, waiting to hear his will, because under the rules the power of the House and of its Members was lodged in the Speaker.

And yet, in the rules which you now propose, you have made no change which affects the power of the Speaker in giving recognition, or in affecting the consideration of measures to be brought before the House or actually brought up in the House. You acknowledge by your course that your charges and statements in the past were mere declamation; that the autocratic power of the Speaker under the former rules is a mere myth, and that the newspaper and magazine articles which have represented the Members of the House to be mere automatons, acting only when the Speaker pulled the wires, were mere fanciful stories, written by sensational writers who had never read the rules and were not familiar with the practices in the House.

CHANGES PROPOSED.

The truth is as to most of you on the Democratic side of the House that you have read and studied the rules now for the first time since you assumed responsibility as a majority. Upon reading and studying the rules you have found little to criticize and less to change.

I propose to discuss the changes which you have actually made in your proposed rules from the rules as heretofore existing. You have inserted as paragraph 3 of Rule XXI the following:

> No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

Do you propose this as a new rule of parliamentary law? Why, every man who has even a rudimentary knowledge of parliamentary law knows that an amendment not germane to the subject matter of a bill was never in order under general parliamentary law, and yet you write it into your rules as a discovery. Is your knowledge of parliamentary law so lax that you do not know that an amendment not germane to the subject matter of the bill is not in order? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Then you provide that it can not be in order with respect to a particular item, unless it relates to the item. Since when did anyone think he could offer an amendment in order to any one item which did not relate to the item? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Is that a Democratic discovery of parliamentary law? You have referred to this on the Democratic side as one of the important changes you propose in the rules. While this provision in the rules will do no harm, it will not change to the extent of the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" the parliamentary law as shown in the precedents from the time of Jefferson's Manual down to the present time.

You have another important amendment or change in your rules. You provide for the election by the House of a Joint Committee on the Disposition of Useless Documents. Has the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] never been called to the fact that the statute law provides for that committee and provides that the Speaker shall appoint the House members of it? [Laughter on the Republican side.] That committee has certain functions to discharge which are very important. It can authorize the destruction of papers in the departments. The committee must be appointed in conformity with the law, because when they discharge the functions of the committee and authorize the destruction of papers, they may find that unless they are legally appointed they are guilty of a penitentiary offense for authorizing the destruction of official papers which can only be destroyed by authority of the law, and the law says the members on the House side shall be appointed by the Speaker. You say they shall be elected by the House.

Another one of the changes which you have made in the rules is to consolidate the rules providing for the consideration of the Private Calendar. A consolidation of those rules was undoubtedly desirable, and in practice they have been treated as consolidated for many years. But you will find when you come to work under the rule which you have adopted, being paragraph 6 of Rule XXIV, that you have not covered the case at all. Your new rule, unless you adopt a forced construction, omits to provide any method by which a bill reported by the Committee on the Whole to the House can be acted on in the House unless it is disposed of on the same day it is reported, and very often it is not possible to do that; and you have inadvertently changed the rule so as to cut out the consideration of bills reported from other committees when calling the calendar of bills reported from the Committee on Claims or the Committee on War Claims.

One other change you have proposed is by including as paragraph 2 of Rule XXI the so-called Holman rule, which undertakes to make in order on the general appropriation bill an amendment changing the existing law, if it shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This provision was adopted many years ago as one of the rules of a Democratic House, and after trying it and finding that it resulted not in the reduction of expenditures, but in the increase of expenses, it was left out of the rules of subsequent Democratic Houses as a dangerous rule, tending to provoke extravagance rather than economy. Under it an amendment will be in order providing for the reduction of an appropriation from $100,000 to $99,000, and requiring the department receiving the appropriation to render some service, which service may cost more than the entire appropriation, and which service, when authorized, will have to be cared for by a deficiency or subsequent appropriation.

This is authorized by the language of the rule, and, in fact, was the result of the working of the rule when in force in the past. Under this rule the Southern Railway mail subsidy, costing, I believe, $250,000 a year, was originally provided for by proposing to reduce some appropriation for the Post Office Department a nominal amount and requiring the department to render the service. It took many years to abolish that subsidy, which became intrenched behind the power of the southern Members of Congress, whose districts were claimed to receive the benefit of it.

You have now proposed this rule through your lack of information, although your predecessors in Congress on your side of the House, when they were in power, discarded it after practice and threw it on the scrap heap. If you had been aware of its history you would not have now proposed it, but you found it in the rules of some Democratic House of the past, and with the innocence of ignorance and the infatuation of a novelty you seized it as a great Democratic rule, thinking that it had been thrown aside by a Republican House and unaware of the fact that it was a Democratic House which, after years of experience with the rule, had cut it out of the rules. But you will learn, for we are here to teach you.

COMMITTEE-DISCHARGE RULE.

One of the new rules which you brag most about is the committee-discharge rule, which reads as follows:

Any Member may present to the Clerk a motion in writing to discharge a committee from further consideration of any public bill or joint resolution which may have been referred to such committee 15 days prior thereto. All such motions shall be entered in the Journal and printed on a calendar to be known as a Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees. Immediately after the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall have been called on any Monday it shall be in order to call up any such motion which shall have been entered at least seven days prior thereto. Recognition for such motions shall be in the order in which they have been entered. When such motion shall be called up the bill shall be read by title only prior to a second being ordered by tellers, and no such motion shall be entertained as to a bill or joint resolution the title of which contains more than 100 words; after the reading of the bill by title the motion shall not be submitted to the House unless seconded by a majority by tellers; if such motion fails of a second, it shall be immediately stricken from the calendar and shall not be thereafter placed thereon. If a second be ordered, debate on such motion shall be limited to 20 minutes, one-half thereof in favor of the proposition and one-half in opposition thereto. Such motions shall have precedence over motions to suspend the rules and shall require for adoption an affirmative vote of a majority of the membership of the House. Whenever such a motion shall prevail the bill so taken from the consideration of a committee shall thereupon be placed upon its appropriate calendar, and upon call of the committee from which any bill has been so taken it may be called up for consideration by any Member prior to any bill reported by said committee at a date subsequent to the discharge of said committee: Provided, No Member shall have upon such calendar more than two motions at the same time.

In the last campaign you, on the Democratic side, told the people—and they believed you—that, under the rules of the House, it was a practice for committees to pigeonhole important bills and refuse to bring them before the House and give the House a chance to vote upon them. Under the old rules and under these proposed rules, every bill which is introduced is referred to a committee. You said that under our rules, if the committee was adverse to the bill, there was no method by which it could be brought before the House, and while I have frequently controverted that statement and have proven in the House by actual fact that there was a way of bringing a bill before the House, although the committee to which it had been referred was opposed to reporting it, yet I propose now only to consider this rule which you offer as a complete remedy for the evils which you have charged existed under the old rules.

In every set of rules adopted by a legislative body, it is important that there shall be a method by which the majority of the Members can bring before the legislative body for consideration and action any proposition which the majority desires to have considered. A legislative body like this House, composed of nearly 400 Members, can not afford to be held up by the small number of Members constituting a majority of one of its committees, and if there be no method by which a majority in the House can bring before the House for consideration a bill, notwithstanding the opposition of less than a dozen members on some committee to which the bill has been referred, then we are, indeed, lacking in virility and power.

I do not propose to discuss the methods which have existed in the past by which the majority could act, but to simply discuss this new rule which is offered as a panacea for all the evils. What does the rule provide? It is that if a committee declines or neglects to report a bill any Member may place upon the calendar a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill.

A somewhat similar rule was prepared in the last House by the distinguished gentleman who is now the Speaker of this House, and adopted by the House. I undertook to show the futility of that rule, and although there were placed upon the calendar in the last House in the neighborhood of 100 motions to discharge committees, the House never got past motion No. 1, which I filed. And the rule in the last House was no more a joke than the rule which is now proposed.

What does the rule propose to do? When your motion is on the calendar to discharge a committee, and you call it up, if it is ever reached, which very likely it never will be, you first have to have it seconded by a majority of all the Members present before it can be put to the House, and then when put to the House it must receive a favorable vote from a majority of the entire elected membership of the House. Considering the fact that on the Mondays when this calendar will be called there is seldom much more than a quorum of the House present, it is not likely that a majority of the membership of the House will often be found to vote for the motion, if there be sufficient opposition to a bill to have a committee refuse to report it. But suppose you have a motion, and it is reached on the call of the calendar, and the majority of the Members present second the motion and the majority of the Members-elect of the House vote for your motion, then what happens? Does the bill come before the House for consideration? Why, not at all. The bill goes on the calendar. Any bill which has been previously reported from the same committee has priority over your bill when the calendar is called. It is not likely that a House in its early days will discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill, because that might be considered unjust to the committee, and even unfair to the House, which is usually entitled to have the benefit of committee consideration first; and if the committee is not discharged until late in the Congress, the calendar will already be so full that there is scarcely any chance of the bill being reached for consideration in the House, even after the committee has been discharged.

You will note that the rule provides for the discharge of a committee from the further consideration of any "public bill or joint resolution." This does not include a simple House resolution. Suppose we should strike out the words "public" and "joint" and provide for the discharge of a committee from consideration of any bill or resolution. You could then introduce a resolution providing that on a certain day the House should proceed to the consideration of a certain bill, whether it be in the hands of a committee, or whether it has been reported from a committee and is on the calendar. Such a resolution would be referred to the Committee on Rules. If you could move to discharge the Committee on Rules, you could bring that resolution before the House, and when adopted, if it should be, you would bring the bill itself up before the House for consideration; but the gentelman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], who is to be the chairman of the Committee on Rules, in introducing these rules for adoption carefully provides that a simple House resolution referred to the Committee on Rules, his committee, shall be beyond the control of the House. You can not discharge the Committee on Rules under this new rule from the consideration of a resolution providing that the House shall proceed to consider and vote upon a pending bill or other proposition.

You can get at a bill now by going out to the document room and asking for it, and that is about as near as you can get to it under this new discharge rule. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

I may undertake to demonstrate if I choose, and I make no promises that I will not choose, to show the utter absurdity, not to say idiocy, of the rule that is now proposed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You have denounced us for years, as well as the rules we adopted in Republican Houses, because we did not permit any individual Member at any time to waste the time of the House on motions to discharge committees. You have said that we were tyrants; that we were afraid; that we were unwilling to meet the issues. You made the public believe that you were sincere and in earnest; that you had a method by which any bill at any time could be brought before the House for consideration without unduly delaying the proceedings in the House. And now that you have the power you offer your remedy. It is a gold brick. It will not work to aid the majority, but you will find that even the rule that you have proposed can be used to annoy the majority. You will have the opportunity during this Congress to vote upon many motions to discharge committees from the further consideration of bills. You will have the responsibility of voting those motions up or down. You will find that the rule will not work efficaciously to produce any good results to the majority, but when we have tried the rule for some time on your majority the Democratic side of this House will be inclined to purchase a patent self-kicking machine, and furnish it to the distinguished gentleman from Texas in order that he may supply himself with what the other Democratic Members would like to give him.

The rule that you bring in on this subject, as well as the other changes in the rules, are mainly inspired through lack of experience and knowledge. With all the talk you have indulged in before the country, you have no more desire than any other majority in a legislative body has to deprive itself of the power to control legislation in the body where it is responsible. [Applause on the Republican side.] All the talk you have indulged in has been for the purpose of deluding the people and to get votes, and now that you have come into power you decline to put into effect the remedy which you have been talking about and talked for, lo, these many years.

I do not criticize you, but you have proven that you have not been sincere. Let us hope that when you come to real legislation, for which rules are only preliminary, you will be sincere.

Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a substitute, which is in terms and in language in effect the resolution offered two years ago by the present Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I do not intend myself to vote for it, but I want to have the pleasure of seeing the Democratic side of the House, then hailing and hurrahing for it, now voting against it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I have referred to all of the important changes which have been proposed in the rules. In the 240 paragraphs constituting the rules there is no other important change from the rules as existing in the House under Speaker CANNON.

RECOGNITION STILL REMAINS WITH THE SPEAKER.

Rule XIV still provides that "when any Member desires to speak, or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to 'Mr. Speaker,' and on being recognized may address the House." The autocratic power in the Speaker to recognize or not to recognize, which has been so ferociously denounced all over the country as a Cannon rule of tyranny, still remains in the identical language of the rule in force while Speaker CANNON presided over the House. I have heard Democrat after Democrat on this floor denounce this rule as depriving Members of their rights, and say that when the Democratic Party came into power in the House it would no longer be left to the sweet will of the Speaker to recognize or refuse to recognize a Member, but that the Speaker would be required to recognize any Member who rose and asked for recognition. I have heard Members on the Democratic side of the House, while Mr. CANNON was Speaker, indignantly exclaim against the question so often put by the Speaker when the Member was asking for recognition, "For what purpose does the gentleman rise?"

Under this rule that same question will be frequently asked by Speaker CLARK, and I listen and wait in vain for any Member on the Democratic side to now object to the provision of this rule.

One other change you have made in the rules, however, and that is in regard to correspondents having the right in the press gallery. Heretofore press correspondents have had the right to use the press gallery under regulations practically prepared and enforced by the body of correspondents themselves. I notice in the rules now that this right is confined to "reputable reporters and correspondents." Who is to determine whether the correspondent is "reputable"? The Speaker? Is this arbitrary power given to the Speaker in addition to the powers which the Speaker has had heretofore? Why is an insinuation put in this rule that newspaper correspondents who have been favorably passed upon by the committee of the correspondents may not be reputable?

Mr. Speaker, I have now gone through the changes proposed by these new rules from the old rules. They are of little importance. There will be no substantial difference in the working practice of the new rules from the old rules. The House will be conducted in the same old manner. Proceedings will be had as heretofore. The precedents of the past will guide us in the future. The legislative mill will grind in the same manner in this Democratic House as it ground under Speaker CANNON in the Republican House. I have never denounced the tyranny of the rules or the tyranny of the Speaker. I have known full well that so long as the Speaker observed the rules he could not be a tyrant and that so long as the rules were observed they were not tyrannical.

I congratulate again the Democratic side of the House in now bringing before the House, after their study and consideration of the rules, practically the same rules that the Republicans had in force. I wish I could congratulate them on having the courage and the manliness to say to the public and to the House, "We had never studied the rules, because we did not have the responsibility, but when we did obtain responsibility, we studied the rules and we find that our charges against the old rules were unjustified; that they did not permit the Speaker to be a tyrant or a czar; that they did preserve individual liberty to the Members, and power to the House; and that we have not been able, after study of the subject, to make any manifest change in the rules or any practical betterment of them, and we apologize to Speaker CANNON and the Republican House for the misleading charges we hurled for years against him and the Republicans." [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if there is anything "idiotic" and "farcical" in the rules as here proposed, it has certainly called forth from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the most doleful speech we have ever heard him deliver. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Permit me to remind his side of the House that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which he has been the distinguished chairman, was constituted in the Sixty-first Congress of 12 Republicans and 6 Democrats. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I did not think the gentleman would make wry faces if we gave him a homeopathic dose of his own medicine by adhering to the same proportion. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Many points made by the gentleman are not tenable, although he assumes to himself all knowledge of parliamentary law. He says that the amendment in regard to revenue measures is not good and that we have acted as if we had discovered something new. Let me say to him, if the amendment is satisfactory to his side, it suits us over here. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The ex-Speaker of the House winced because I politely alluded to the fact that prior to his administration of that great office no Speaker's decision had ever been overruled. I regret these things did occur while he was the Speaker of the House, and am satisfied now he regrets that such record fell to his lot.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have not the time.

Mr. CANNON. It is only to correct a statement.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then I will yield.

Mr. CANNON. The books are full of instances where many other Speakers were repeatedly overruled.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. My remarks were only a quotation from Thomas B. Reed, the accuracy of which is left to rest with his speech and memory. Now, Mr. Speaker, the ex-Speaker also said, "You have taken the power of appointing committees away from the Speaker and vested it in the Committee on Rules," and added, "This House must drive the Committee on Rules to make it conform to its views." That is not a bad proposition. 'Tis well! It is much better than when the distinguished gentleman from Illinois carried the "bait gourd" and appointed the committees and Members were compelled to do obeisance to his will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This is a different story. Let me say that although he has said the epithet of "czar" may be transferred from the Speaker's chair to the floor of this House and applied to my humble self, I hope no such unhappy fate may ever befall me. In so far as I am individually concerned, whenever the majority of this House, which has elected the Committee on Rules, gives their command to bring in a rule to conform to their will a ready response will be found. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Yes; the American people demanded that we should take power away from the Speaker and restore it to the membership. They decreed that we should elect the committees. That is where the power belongs, and our Speaker consented to it.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman complains of the retrenchment provision placed in the new rules. They have gone back and dug up ancient history. Let me say to you gentlemen that some of the most important matters of legislation ever passed through legislative bodies have been on appropriation measures. Riders have been placed on such bills, shaking the foundation of kingdoms and republics! We have only enlarged and restored the power of appropriation to the representatives of the people, fresh from their constituents, bearing the banner of economy for the good of the whole country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And while the President of the United States is a Republican, and the Senate is controlled by the Republican Party, thanks to popular approval this House has been commissioned to retrench and economize and save the people's money. And when the final chapter of the history of this Congress has been written it will perpetuate the living truth that we have saved the American people millions of dollars. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, if there are any other amendments necessary at a later day, they will be added in behalf of the country. At present we are ready and willing to indorse this work and now invite the formal vote. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. Under the order adopted by the House the vote will first be taken on the substitute.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HENRY of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the rules just adopted be printed (Order No. 1).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the rules just adopted be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how they will be distributed.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that under the law as now provided for if documents of this kind are ordered the document room will have liberty to increase the number and order as many copies as are necessary.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understand that, but I wanted to be understood by Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the rules as adopted be printed. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make one more request, and that is that Members be allowed five legislative days in which to print on the subject of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is that to apply to all Members or to Members who spoke upon the rules to-day?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. To all Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days within which to print remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the rules. Is there objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, would that give to a Member who has spoken the right to extend his remarks?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, certainly.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to inquire if it is the purpose of the gentleman from Texas to allow everybody to print remarks in the RECORD upon this proposition?

Mr. MANN. That is the request.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. OLMSTED. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke on the question of the rules shall have five legislative days in which to print on that subject. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] will give me his attention a moment, it occurs to me that there is no doubt but that a motion permitting gentlemen to print on this subject would be in order, and a majority could agree to give them the opportunity to print on the subject of the rules unless there is a demand for the regular order. We have now got rules. Such a motion of course could be cut off by a demand for the regular order. The regular order, of course, is to clear the Speaker's table.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, in order to simplify the situation, I demand the regular order.

MESSENGER TO SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 31.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $1,200 for the services of a messenger to be appointed by the Speaker to serve at the Speaker's table, said office to be in lieu of the messenger at the Speaker's table at $1,200 per annum, office of the Doorkeeper, as now authorized.

Resolved, That the Speaker shall control the appointment and removal of the messenger at the Speaker's table, the salary of which is provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, under the office of the Doorkeeper.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the resolution provide that the Speaker shall have authority to appoint an official which the law provides shall be appointed some other way?

Mr. LLOYD. The sole purpose of this resolution is to authorize the Speaker to appoint a messenger at his table.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection——

Mr. LLOYD. Under existing law the messenger at the Speaker's table is appointed by the Doorkeeper.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman, after all, I did not intend to say anything about it, it would be better to provide privately that the Speaker direct the Doorkeeper to discharge that clerk, because the law provides the Doorkeeper shall make that appointment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appointment by the Speaker, until the law has been changed, will not give the person designated the salary, which is the important thing.

Mr. LLOYD. This provides that the salary which is now allowed to a messenger at the Speaker's table under existing law shall be given to him when appointed by the Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not do that by resolution of the House; provide that what the law provides shall be paid to a person designated in one way shall be paid to a person designated in another way.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, there is no trouble about the matter, it occurs to me, if the resolution provides that until further provided for the messenger who shall be appointed by the Speaker shall be paid out of the contingent fund. I think it will meet all requirements of the law, because under the precedents, under rulings of the Comptroller of the Treasury time and time again, it has been held that the House has absolute control over its contingent fund, and if this resolution provides for the payment of a messenger to the Speaker's table, to be paid out of the contingent fund until provided for by law, and the Doorkeeper does not appoint some one to take the place of the man whom the Doorkeeper is authorized to reappoint, there will be no one to draw the salary, and it will lapse into the Treasury, so that while you can not change the law by a resolution you can provide for the payment of money out of the contingent fund for any purpose that the House sees fit to pay.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be reported again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I wish the resolution to be read in the form in which I have just modified it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the modified resolution.

Mr. MANN. The other resolution is before the House. Unless the gentleman withdraws it——

Mr. LLOYD. I wish to withdraw the other resolution, and I offer the modified one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modified resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum for the services of a messenger to be appointed by the Speaker to serve at the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

JOHN T. CHANCEY.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John T. Chancey be continued in the service of the House of Representatives in his present position during the Sixty-second Congress at his present compensation.

[Applause.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the resolution reported again.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, that position is already provided for under the law. The resolution is not necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no desire, and do not intend, to oppose the proposition to continue this man, whom I know; but if the gentleman will examine the legislative bill he will find that this employee is carried on the rolls of the House until 1912 at his present salary, and this resolution might be a recognition of some authority somewhere to remove. He is an employee of the House, originally specified in a resolution, and has been continued for a great many years under the original resolution and carried in every appropriation bill since.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, if it is unnecessary, of course I do not care to press it. I withdraw the resolution.

JOURNAL CLERK.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $4,000 per annum for the services of a journal clerk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent for that?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law does provide for the compensation of a journal clerk.

Mr. LLOYD. The law provides for the payment of a journal clerk, but the law also provides that the journal clerk shall be appointed by the Clerk, and the purpose of this resolution is to authorize the Speaker to appoint the journal clerk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The resolution does not provide by whom the clerk shall be appointed at all.

Mr. LLOYD. This resolution provides that the Speaker shall appoint the journal clerk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that it go over. Provision is made for it by law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] to the fact that this resolution does not provide that the journal clerk shall be appointed by the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Let it go over, and take time to consider it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, for the present I withdraw the resolution.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, April 6, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on the Geological Survey and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

House joint memorial No. 6—Requesting the Congress of the United States to take steps to prohibit the changing of the old names of Montana's mountains and streams.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Government officials in charge of the work of making geological, topographical, and other Government surveys of Montana, both in and out of forest reserves, have seen fit to change the old names of many of our mountains and streams; and

Whereas the old names index Montana's early history and should be preserved as part of the old West: Now therefore be it

Resolved (the Senate concurring), That we, the Twelfth Legislature of the State of Montana, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation forbidding the changing of names of Montana's mountains, rivers, and streams, and to make it obligatory upon those in authority to use the old names in making maps of this State; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, instructed to transmit properly authenticated copies of this resolution to the Secretary of the Interior, our Senators and Representatives in Congress, the Director of the United States Geological Survey, and to the President of the United States Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives.

W. W. McDOWELL,
Speaker of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 12—Memorializing the Congress of the United States to create a commission whose duties shall be to classify and segregate all agricultural lands in forest reserves in the United States.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas large areas of agricultural lands are included in the various forest reserves of the United States that are more valuable for agriculture than for forestry; and

Whereas the same should be speedily opened to actual and bona fide settlers applying for same under the homestead laws: Now therefore be it

Resolved, the senate concurring, That we, the Twelfth Legislature of the State of Montana, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States that a commission of three persons be appointed for each State in which forest reserves are located; said commission to consist of one resident of such State and one person connected with the Forestry Service and one person whose residence shall not be in the State. The duties of said commission shall be to enforce the laws relative to homesteads in the forest reserves in a just and liberal manner, and to immediately pass on the application of all persons applying for homesteads upon such reservations; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, instructed to transmit properly authenticated copies of this resolution to the Secretary of the Interior, our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Senate joint memorial 10.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas under the present statutes and rulings of the Department of the Interior relating to the disposition of coal lands owned by the United States it is now possible that the price of coal lands may fluctuate or change between the date of entry and the time of payment by the entryman; and

Whereas it is the sense of the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana that such fluctuation or change of price during that period is unfair and unjust to the entryman: Now therefore be it

Resolved (the House concurring), That we, the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation to correct and remedy the evil herein above referred to.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senate of the United States, and that a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the House of Representatives of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senators and Representative in Congress of the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about a speedy action for the accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 15.

Whereas by the terms of a treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Government of Russia in the year 1832 it was provided that the inhabitants of each of the respective contracting States and all of such inhabitants should be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts of the territories of the other and should enjoy the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing; and

Whereas the said Government of Russia now claims the right, under the provisions of such treaty, to exclude from its territories American citizens of the Jewish faith, because of local laws and ordinances; and

Whereas the American people have always regarded the said treaty as guaranteeing to all our citizens the right of sojourn within the Russian Empire, without discrimination on account of either race or creed; and

Whereas the premises being recited a resolution is now pending before the National House of Representatives calling for the termination of the said treaty because of the unwarrantable construction so put upon it, after due notice to the Government of Russia; and

Whereas in the opinion of this house such exclusion of American citizens on any such ground is contrary to the spirit of the age and particularly obnoxious to the sentiment of religious toleration historically characteristic of the people of this country: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring), That the resolution so pending before the Congress merits the approbation of all lovers of liberty and justice, and ought to be adopted without delay.

Resolved, That the Representatives in Congress from this State be, and they hereby are, urged to use all honorable means to procure the speedy passage of the said resolution and action in accordance therewith by the Department of State.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly attested by the secretary of state, be by him transmitted to the President of the United States, the presiding officer of each House of Congress, and to the Senators and Representative in Congress from the State of Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 3.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representative in Congress assembled:

Whereas a national forest reserve has been established in central western Montana known as the Snowy Mountains National Forest; and

Whereas the territory included within such Snowy Mountains National Forest is the natural home of great numbers of game animals; and

Whereas such game animals have not now in the State of Montana any place or shelter where they are safe from the destruction of hunters; and

Whereas it is deemed advisable that these game animals should be preserved and allowed to breed and grow without molestation of hunters: Now therefore be it

Resolved (the senate concurring), That we, the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation to, at as early a date as practicable, authorize the President of the United States, by proclamation or executive order, to set aside and designate the territory included within the Snowy Mountains National Forest as a game preserve wherein the natural wild game will be forever protected and immune from the attacks of the hunters.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senate of the United States, and a copy thereof be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C.; and Resolved further, That a copy thereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to each of the Representatives of the State of Montana in the Congress of the United States with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about a speedy action for the accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

Senate Joint Memorial No. 7—Asking for the construction of two steel bridges over the Kootenai River in the Kootenai National Forest Reserve by the United States Government acting in conjunction with the civil government of Lincoln County, Mont.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas vast tracts of valuable public lands of Montana have heretofore been withdrawn from settlement and set aside by the Federal Government as forest reserves thereby permanently preventing their occupation and development; and

Whereas these forest reservations in the county of Lincoln, State of Montana, particularly, cover a large portion of the area of the county and are only accessible by mere forest trails sufficient alone for footpaths, and are utterly inaccessible at present to vehicles of any character as there are but few roads and bridges in any part of these reservations over which a wagon can be driven; and

Whereas the land over which these forest trails have been built can not be made by public taxation to bear any part of the expenses of constructing roads and bridges required by the inhabitants of these regions; and

Whereas recent experiences have shown that the lack of suitable roads and bridges in these forest reserves has resulted in enormous loss by forest fires of vast quantities of very valuable timber and in a terrible sacrifice of human life: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the House of Representatives concurring herein), That we petition the Congress of the United States for the necessary legislation enabling and directing the construction, under supervision of the board of county commissioners of Lincoln County, Mont., of two steel highway bridges across the Kootenai River at suitable and convenient places in Lincoln County, one half of the expenses of the construction of said bridges to be paid out of the funds set aside for the maintenance and protection of the national forests and the other half of said expenses to be paid out of the public treasury of the said county of Lincoln under an agreement to be entered into between the proper Federal officers and the county commissioners of Lincoln County, Mont.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senate of the United States; and that a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the State of Montana, to the House of Representatives of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted, by the secretary of state of the State of Montana, to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about a speedy action for the accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (J. Res. 61 A) indorsing the action of the United States House of Representatives in selecting San Francisco as the site for the Panama Canal Exposition of 1915.

Whereas the people of California have raised seventeen and a half million dollars for the purpose of holding an international exposition at San Francisco in 1915 to celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal, and neither ask nor desire aid from Congress other than a mere invitation to foreign nations to participate in said exposition; and

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States of America, January 31, 1911, by decisive vote, has chosen San Francisco as the city in which to hold the exposition commemorating the opening of the Panama Canal: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly, the senate concurring, That we do hereby approve and indorse the said action of the House of Representatives of the United States in selecting San Francisco as the site for said exposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 10—Relative to the establishment of a parcels post.

Whereas the establishment of a parcels post would be an inestimable benefit to the State of California and an incalculable stimulus to trade, both domestic and foreign, throughout the whole of the United States; and

Whereas it has been found possible for the American express companies to unite in giving to the British post office a flat rate of 24 cents on parcels up to 11 pounds for all distances between New York and San Francisco, thus proving the economic practicability of such desired parcels post: Be it

Resolved, That the Senate and Assembly of the State of California hereby join in requesting our Representatives in the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington to do their utmost to forward such legislation as may insure the establishment of a parcels post at rates not to exceed those accorded by American express companies to the foreigner, viz, 24 cents for packages up to 11 pounds; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forthwith transmitted by the secretary of the senate to the President of the Senate of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and a copy hereof to each Member of Congress from the State of California.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 7.

Whereas it appears from investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States and otherwise that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States, and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof by placing the subject under Federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and enforce its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now therefore

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the application be made, and hereby is made, to Congress under the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, That the legislature of all other States of the United States, now in session or when next convened, be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or an equivalent resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to the several Members of said bodies representing this State therein; also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

Mr. BROWN. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution by House and Senate of Nebraska Legislature, thirty-second session—Antipolygamy resolution.

Whereas it appears from investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States, and otherwise, that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States, and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof by placing the subject under Federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and enforce its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now therefore

Resolved, That the application be made and hereby is made to Congress under the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States, now in session or when next convened, be, and they hereby are, respectfully requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or an equivalent resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the several Members of said bodies representing this State therein; also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

JOHN KUHL,
Speaker of House of Representatives.
M. R. HOPEWELL,
President of Senate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Nebraska, ss:

I, Addison Wait, secretary of the State of Nebraska, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of a joint resolution relating to the practice of polygamy, adopted by the thirty-second session of the Legislature of Nebraska and approved by Chester H. Aldrich, governor of said State, March 14, 1911.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Lincoln, this, the 14th day of March, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] ADDISON WAIT, Secretary of State.

Mr. BROWN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Clay Center, Nebr., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the city council of Rock Island, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the condition of the employees at the Rock Island Arsenal, Ill., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the establishment of a national department of public health, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I present a memorial from 28 of the leading furniture manufacturers of Grand Rapids, Mich. I should like to have the memorial read for the information of the Senate, and the signatures may be printed with the consent of the Senate.

There being no objection, the memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., March 15, 1911.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

We commend the statesmanship of President William H. Taft for his negotiation of the Canadian reciprocity treaty as a step to larger commercial activity and freer trade with the countries of North America.

We believe, however, that amendments should be made to the treaty lowering or abolishing the duties on some classes of manufactured goods that will be mutually beneficial: Therefore

We the undersigned manufacturers respectfully request that our Senators and Representatives favor the removal of all duties between the two countries on manufactured furniture and refrigerators.

Mr. PERKINS. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 16—Relative to the cession by the United States to the State of California of certain lands adjacent to Deadmans Island, in the County of Los Angeles, State of California.

Whereas by an act of the Legislature of the State of California entitled "An act relinquishing to the United States of America the title of this State to certain lands," approved March 9, 1897, the State of California granted all its right and title in and to the parcels of land extending from high-water mark out to 300 yards below low-water mark, lying adjacent and contiguous to such lands of the United States in the State of California as lie upon tidal waters and are held, occupied, or reserved for military purposes or defense, lying adjacent and contiguous to any island, the title to which is in the United States, or which island is reserved by the United States for any military or naval purpose or for defense, were granted, released, and ceded to the United States of America under certain terms, conditions, and reservations expressed in said act; and

Whereas the title to Deadmans Island, a certain island situate in the waters of the Pacific Ocean, and being within the boundaries of the city of Los Angeles, in Los Angeles County, State of California, is in the United States, and by said act there was granted to the United States a certain tract of land consisting of tide and submerged land surrounding said island, which said tract of land is bounded by a line distant 300 yards out beyond low-water mark at all points where the boundaries of said island touch high-water mark; and

Whereas said Deadmans Island is situated on the easterly side of the main entrance channel to that portion of Los Angeles Harbor formerly known as the inner harbor of San Pedro, and the said tract of land surrounding said island and so granted to the United States includes a certain parcel of submerged land situated in the city of Los Angeles, in the county of Los Angeles, State of California, more particularly described as follows:

Beginning at the point of intersection of the northerly boundary line of said tract of land so granted to the United States with the harbor line established by the United States on the westerly side of said channel, said point being at or near station No. 16 of said harbor line; thence southeasterly along said harbor line to station ZZ thereof; thence continuing southeasterly from said station ZZ of said harbor line in a straight line to the point of intersection of the southerly boundary line of said tract of land so granted to the United States, with the said harbor line, which said last-mentioned point is at or near station No. 15 of said harbor line; thence northwesterly, northerly, and northeasterly along the westerly boundary line of said tract of land to the point of beginning; and

Whereas said parcel of land above described is 1,875 feet, more or less, in length along the said channel and adjacent thereto, and has a maximum width of 360 feet, more or less, and contains approximately 11 acres of land; and said parcel of land lies adjacent to other tide and submerged lands wholly under public ownership and control, lying on the westerly side of said channel; and

Whereas the said city of Los Angeles has incurred a bonded indebtedness of $3,000,000 for the purpose of developing and improving said Los Angeles Harbor, including that portion of the lands and waters thereof adjacent to said parcel of land, by the construction of docks, wharves, and warehouses upon the water front of said city, the same to be owned and operated by said city, by the operating and construction of public streets and highways to the navigable waters of said harbor, and by the construction of slips, canals, and other waterways, and it is now proposed to expend the proceeds of said bonds for said purposes; and said parcel of land is so situated that it is urgently required for the construction and maintenance of public docks, wharves, slips, and other commercial appliances appurtenant thereto for the accommodation of commerce in said Los Angeles Harbor, and for the purpose of providing the necessary frontage for and access to the same upon and from said channel and the other navigable waters of said harbor; and the use of said parcel of land for said purposes is necessary in order that the said lands adjacent to said channel on the westerly side thereof may be adequately used for the purposes aforesaid, in order to properly develop and improve said harbor for commercial purposes; and

Whereas said parcel of land, by reason of its location and irregular shape, is not required or suitable for any of the purposes specified in said act, and the United States has never used and does not now use the same for any of said purposes, or for any other purpose: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California memorializes the Congress of the United States to cede to the State of California that certain parcel of land situate in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, State of California, hereinbefore referred to and more particularly described as follows:

Beginning at the point of intersection of the northerly boundary line of said tract of land so granted to the United States with the harbor line established by the United States on the westerly side of said channel, said point being at or near station No. 16 of said harbor line; thence southeasterly along said harbor line to station ZZ thereof; thence continuing southeasterly from said station ZZ of said harbor line in a straight line to the point of intersection of the southerly boundary line of said tract of land so granted to the United States, with the said harbor line, which said last-mentioned point is at or near station No. 15 of said harbor line; thence northwesterly, northerly, and northeasterly along the westerly boundary line of said tract of land to the point of beginning;

For use for the construction and maintenance of public docks, slips, and wharves, and other commercial appliances appurtenant thereto for the accommodation of commerce in said Los Angeles Harbor; and that the Government of the United States and the Secretary of War be requested not to use said parcel of land for any of the purposes specified in said act or for any other purpose; and be it further

Resolved, That the State of California will accept the cession and transfer from the Government of the United States of said parcel of land last above described, to be held for public purposes, to wit, for the construction and maintenance of public docks, slips, and wharves, and other commercial appliances appurtenant thereto for the accommodation of commerce in Los Angeles Harbor; and be it further

Resolved, That the State of California hereby offers to grant and relinquish to the United States its right and title to such other lands in, upon, or adjacent to the waters of said harbor, in addition to the lands heretofore granted to the United States, as shall be selected by the United States for military purposes or defense, or for such other purposes as the Government of the United States may require; and be it further

Resolved, That upon the passage of this resolution the secretary of the senate be directed to forward a copy thereof to the Secretary of War and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress, requesting them to present the resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. PERKINS. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 10—Relative to the establishment of a parcels post.

Whereas the establishment of a parcels post would be an inestimable benefit to the State of California and an incalculable stimulus to trade, both domestic and foreign, throughout the whole of the United States; and

Whereas it has been found possible for the American express companies to unite in giving to the British post office a flat rate of 24 cents on parcels up to 11 pounds for all distances between New York and San Francisco, thus proving the economic practicability of such desired parcels post: Be it

Resolved, That the Senate and assembly of the State of California hereby join in requesting our Representatives in the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington to do their utmost to forward such legislation as may insure the establishment of a parcels post at rates not to exceed those accorded by American express companies to the foreigner, viz, 24 cents for packages up to 11 pounds; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forthwith transmitted by the secretary of the senate to the President of the Senate of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and a copy hereof to each Member of Congress from the State of California.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Ministers' Association of Laconia, N. H., praying for the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and England, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Lincoln Park Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, praying that Lincoln Park, in the District of Columbia, be selected as the site for the proposed Lincoln Memorial, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Lincoln Park Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to systematize the finances of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BURNHAM presented memorials of Fremont Grange, of Raymond; Pembroke Grange, of Pembroke; and of Candia Grange, No. 167, of Candia, all of the Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a memorial of Pioneer Grange, No. 69, Patrons of Husbandry, of Kansas, and a memorial of Mount Pleasant Grange, No. 1445, Patrons of Husbandry, of Kansas, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of William B. Meehan, of Boston, Mass., and of 600 citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the establishment of a national department of public health, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wadena, Minn., remonstrating against the action of the President of the United States in sending United States troops to the Mexican border, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented a petition of Thomas H. Marshall Post, No. 42, Grand Army of the Republic, of Belfast, Me., and a petition of the Somerset County Veterans' Association, of Madison, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of the Maine State Grange; of Local Grange No. 338, of Monticello; of Eureka Grange, No. 113, of Mapleton; of Eastern Star Grange, No. 1, of Hampden, all of the Patrons of Husbandry; and of Amasa Howe and 50 other citizens of Aroostook County; of George H. Smith and 146 other citizens of Aroostook County, all in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial of sundry members of the local chapter of the American Woman's League of Miami, Fla., remonstrating against the high rate of postage charged on the Woman's National Daily, published at University City, Mo., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, in behalf of soldiers who served in Indian wars. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, now in session, do hereby submit for your favorable consideration the following memorial:

Whereas the soldiers who served in the Indian campaigns from 1865 to 1883, rendering valuable service and enduring great hardship, many sacrificing their lives, and all giving to the Nation the best years of their life in opening up these vast western territories to be developed by the industry of the pioneer, have been unjustly neglected and forgotten by the National Government.

And while many whose services have made it possible to change the Great North American Desert, as it was called on the maps of less than 50 years ago, into rich and prosperous States have passed into eternity, there are a few aged veterans who still remain with us awaiting the final summons, we believe it to be the grateful duty of the Government to see that these men in their declining years shall not lack the necessities of life.

Therefore your memorialists respectfully request the passage of a bill giving to the surviving soldiers who served the United States Government 90 days or more in actual service in the Indian wars from 1865 to 1883, inclusive, the same pensions accorded those who served in the Indian wars previous to 1860, during the Civil War, and during the Spanish War.

The foregoing resolution was adopted by the Senate of the State of Nebraska on March 29, 1911.

WM. H. SMITH,
Secretary State Senate.

Approved by the house of representatives March 31, 1911.

HARRY C. RICHARDSON,
Chief Clerk.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer a privileged resolution (S. Res. 6).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the Senate by resolution adopted on the 20th day of June, 1910, authorized and directed the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate certain charges against WILLIAM LORIMER, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and to report to the Senate whether in the election of said LORIMER as a Senator of the United States from said State of Illinois there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; and

Whereas said committee, pursuant to said resolution, took the testimony of a large number of witnesses, reduced the testimony to printed form, and reported the same to the Senate, which was thereafter considered and acted upon by the Senate; and

Whereas the Illinois State Senate thereafter appointed a committee to investigate like charges against WILLIAM LORIMER and to report to said State senate whether in the election of said LORIMER to the United States Senate corrupt methods and practices were employed and used; and

Whereas as it appears from the published reports of the proceedings of the said Illinois State Senate committee that witnesses who were not called and sworn by the committee of this Senate appointed to investigate said charges have appeared before the said committee of the Illinois State Senate, and upon being interrogated have given important material testimony tending to prove that $100,000 was corruptly expended to secure the election of WILLIAM LORIMER to the United States Senate:

Resolved, That Senators JOHN D. WORKS, CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, GEORGE P. MCLEAN, JOHN W. KERN, and ATLEE POMERENE be, and they are hereby, appointed a special committee, and as such committee be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and report to the Senate whether in the election of WILLIAM LORIMER, as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois, there were used and employed corrupt methods and practices; that said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of Congress, to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, to employ stenographers, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to report the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the resolution printed and lie on the table subject to call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of the first paragraph of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election, as the legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution."

Mr. BROWN. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 2) approving the constitutions formed by the constitutional conventions of the Territory of New Mexico and the Territory of Arizona was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the constitution formed by the constitutional convention of the Territory of New Mexico, elected in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, etc.," approved June 20, A. D. 1910, which said constitutional convention met at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on the 3d day of October, A. D. 1910, and which adjourned November 21, A. D. 1910, and which constitution was subsequently ratified and adopted by the duly qualified electors of the Territory of New Mexico at an election held according to law on the 21st day of January, A. D. 1911, being republican in form and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and complying with the terms of said enabling act, be, and the same is hereby, approved, subject to the terms and conditions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution reaffirming the boundary line between Texas and the Territory of New Mexico," approved on the 16th day of February, A. D. 1911.

SEC. 2. That the constitution formed by the constitutional convention of the Territory of Arizona, elected in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress entitled "An act to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, etc.," approved June 20, A. D. 1910, which said constitutional convention met at Phoenix, Ariz., on the 10th day of October, A. D. 1910, and which constitution was subsequently ratified and adopted by the duly qualified electors of the Territory of Arizona at an election held according to law on the 9th day of February, A. D. 1911, being republican in form and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence and complying with the terms of said enabling act, be, and the same is hereby, approved.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the joint resolution may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of the first paragraph of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, and in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election, as the legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and, if there is no objection, I ask for its present consideration. The Senate has heretofore acted upon a similar joint resolution. It is simply to provide for the continuance of the Joint Special Committee for the Revision and Codification of the Laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 5) to create a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a special joint committee be appointed, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President from Members of the Sixty-second Congress, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker from the Members of the Sixty-second Congress, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the Statutory Revision Commission, heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including all laws of a general nature, permanent in character, passed since the submission to Congress, on December 15, 1906, of the final report of said commission; and that the said joint committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expenses as may be deemed necessary, all such expense to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, under the law the joint resolution must necessarily go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It is a matter of statutory provision.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 6) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909; to the Committee on Finance.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 7) to print Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LODGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 8) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a statue of Alexander Hamilton in Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. OWEN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 9) approving the constitutions formed by the constitutional conventions of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona; to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of the first paragraph of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, and in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election, as the legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution."

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—NANCY E. F. BAKER.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Nancy E. F. Baker (S. 9245, 61st Cong., 3d sess.) be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—DAVID B. SPENCE.

On motion of Mr. SHIVELY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of David B. Spence (S. 7554, 61st Cong.), for original pension, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RULES OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. ROOT. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 7) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and it is hereby, instructed to report for the consideration of the Senate a rule or rules to secure more effective control by the Senate over its procedure, and especially over its procedure upon conference reports and upon bills which have been passed by the House and have been favorably reported in the Senate.

ADDITIONAL LABORER IN STATIONERY ROOM.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 8), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized to employ an additional laborer in the Senate stationery room at the rate of $720 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for.

UNITED STATES EXPRESS CO.

Mr. GORE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 9), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the contract between the Government of the United States and the United States Express Co., entered into on or about April 21, 1889, together with any renewal or substitute contract therefor, and the annual amounts of compensation paid to said company in pursuance of said contract.

RULINGS OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit a resolution, with an accompanying paper. I ask that the resolution be read, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 10) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be required and directed to furnish to the Senate copy of the rulings of his department, and his reasons therefor, in regard to the circulation of the Woman's National Weekly; also the Harpoon, of Denver, two newspapers published in the United States, inasmuch as serious charges are made against said rulings, as is shown by letter attached and made a part of this resolution; that said information be furnished to the Senate at the earliest possible convenience of the department.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask to have the letter read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

BANK OF DENNING,
Ozark, Ark., March 31, 1911.

Hon. JEFF DAVIS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As one of your constituents in this neck of the woods, would like to ask that you give a few moments serious thought to some of the recent rulings of the postal department, from which it has been made to appear that certain officials have made arbitrary rulings relative to certain newspapers, and without apparent cause have demanded that one paper strike from its subscription list the names of upward of 100,000 subscribers for the reason that relatives or friends saw fit to make them a present of the paper for a year by paying in advance the regular subscription price of said publication.

It occurs to me that there is a rotten egg in the basket somewhere, that the postal department should say that, because a friend desires to give a year's subscription, that the department can step in and say that they can not receive same because they did not apparently send in the money in their own name.

Having followed your record for election of Senators by popular vote, and believing that you are in a sincere desire to give the common people a square deal, I will note with considerable pleasure any action you may take with reference to a thorough airing of the postal department and its arbitrary rulings.

Yours, very sincerely, R. M. ADAMS.

I refer to the Woman's National Daily, now the Woman's National Weekly; also the Harpoon, of Denver.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over, objection having been made.

REPUBLIC OF PORTUGAL.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit a resolution and ask that it be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 11), as follows:

Whereas under the impulse of the world movement for popular rights and republican government, with which the United States are and have ever been in sympathy, the people of Portugal in October, 1910, overthrew the monarchy and established a republic: It is therefore

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the Senate whether the Republic so established has in operation a civil government capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independent power; and if so, whether the Republic has been officially and fully recognized by the executive department of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope the motion will not be adopted. The resolution merely requests of the President certain information, and that is its only purpose. The people of Portugal—I do not want to discuss the matter——

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me the resolution recites a good many facts. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hope the Senator from Texas will not object to its reference.

Mr. CULBERSON. I presume the majority will sustain the motion of the Senator from Illinois, but the facts recited are those of current history and are known of all men—that the people of Portugal overthrew the monarchy, expelled the king from their borders, and established a republic in October, 1910.

Mr. CULLOM. If the resolution is all right it will be reported back from the committee very soon.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope the motion of the Senator from Illinois will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I wish to announce that on Monday next, if it shall be the pleasure of the Senate, immediately after the routine morning business, I desire to submit some remarks on certain reforms in representative government presented by various proposed constitutional amendments.

OPINION ON DIRECT LEGISLATION.

Mr. BROWN. I present an opinion by the supreme court of the State of Oregon involving the constitutionality of direct legislation provisions in their constitution. It is by Judge King, a very able judge. I ask that the paper be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 6).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Nebraska as to the character of the paper.

Mr. BROWN. It is the opinion of the supreme court of Oregon, speaking through Justice King. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to its being printed in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 10, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 6, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized. The Chair, however, will request the gentleman to suspend a moment until a Member can be sworn in.

OATH OF OFFICE.

The oath of office was administered by the Speaker to Mr. KONIG, a Representative from Maryland.

PRESENTATION OF GAVEL TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I am delegated by the people of Ralls County, in the ninth congressional district of Missouri, which is the district the Speaker has the honor to represent, to present to him on this occasion a gavel which he is expected, as the first Democratic Speaker west of the Mississippi River, to wield in evidence of his power. [General applause.]

There has been sent to me by mail a statement of the history of this mallet. I will ask the Clerk to read that statement, which has been prepared and sent to me by Hon. David Wallace, of Ralls County, Mo.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUR-OAK GAVEL MADE BY FRIENDS OF HON. CHAMP CLARK IN RALLS COUNTY, MO., AND TO BE PRESENTED TO HIM ON HIS ELECTION AS SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AT WASHINGTON, D. C.—A BIT OF HISTORY ABOUT THIS GAVEL.

Enoch Matson, supposed to be the first white child born in Bourbon County, Ky., and a son of one of the patriots who followed Washington in the struggle for national independence, came to the Territory of Missouri in the year 1816, settling in the valley of the Father of Waters near the town of Clarksville, Pike County. The next year he moved to the banks of Peno, a very rapid stream of the county of Joe Bowers, and a little way up that stream built a dam across the water and put up the first gristmill run by water power north of the Missouri River. A tall and smooth bur-oak tree close by was felled, and from this a 50-foot section was taken, which became the apron log of the dam. The mill was operated for many years by the Matson family, and was from far and near visited by the early pioneers and Indians with grist to grind in the making of the ash-cooked pone bread. With the roll of years the mill went to decay, and even the spot was forgotten by many who formerly knew it well.

There was a member of the Matson family in these parts, and one of the descendants of the elder Matson took a party of Ralls friends with him last summer and went hunting for the old dam, with the view of uncarthing one of the timbers, from which to make a gavel for Mr. CLARK, so sure were they that he would be elected Speaker and need to control with mallet of oak the unruly Republican minority led by the to-be-deposed CANNON.

After diligent search Mr. A. P. Matson and Warren C. Hatcher, both Clark enthusiasts, discovered the sleeping apron log at the site of the old dam, deeply embedded in sand and water, and cut away a 5-foot section. The timber was well preserved, sound and hearty, and a team of Missouri mules pulled it out into daylight. A local sawmill cut the severed piece into dimension sizes, out of which a gavel has been made for the use of Mr. CLARK and another for the use of Hon. William T. Tagland, judge of the tenth judicial circuit court, and a number of walking sticks have been made. In the early use of this old mill it was a frequent custom of the patrons, in the absence of the owner, to do their own tolling and grinding of the grist by turning on the water which furnished the power for grinding, pouring in the rude hopper the grain to be ground, and then, at another place in the mill, down in the basement, to sack up the ground material. On one occasion, it is related, a neighbor came to the mill and following him was his pack of hounds. While attending to the grinding his attention was called to the fact that his dogs had left him, and the deep distant baying of the hounds told him that game had been found by them. On search it was discovered that the pack were in the basement of the mill with their mouths to the spout, lapping the meal as it slowly came forth. At times the water would slightly fail by getting low, and, the power ceasing, the supply of meal would stop. At this the hounds would set up a howling like Oliver Twist, asking for more. And it is further related that before the process had been discovered the grist was about all gone. Prior to the building of this old mill on Peno Creek by Enoch Matson he brought with him two hand-mill stones used in one of the Carolinas, and these, after being used in Kentucky for a number of years, were brought to Missouri and used until the Peno mill was put up. These faithful old stones, about 18 inches in diameter and 3½ inches thick, are now in the possession of Mr. A. P. Matson, of New London, Mo., and a grandson of the miller, Matson. The site of the old mill is thought by many to be haunted and that Indian spirits still linger around it. The legend runs that many years ago, in the days before the advent of the paleface, a beautiful Indian maiden who lived near the old dam site fell in love with a white man. She unrequited the love of the chief's son, a dashing young brave, and eloped with the white youth. This angered the old chief, and, gathering a number of his braves, he hunted and caught the pair and, after torturing both of them, threw the bodies in the deep water at the dam; hence the lingering spirits and the nightly visits of the phantom beings.

It may be that the span of mules which pulled the 5 feet of apron log out of its hiding place of nearly a century is not the team promised by Col. Luke M. Emerson, of Pike County, Mo., to carry Mr. CLARK down Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington in the event of his election to the seat so long and ably held by Henry Clay, but if they are, though the best in this imperial State, they came very near being lost in that task by the treacherous quicksand in and about the old mill-dam; it was a narrow escape for team and men.

So Mr. CLARK will have a gavel with a history of love and romance attached; a history of ancient as well as present usefulness; a history of love, hatred, and revenge as well.

The gavel bears a silver plate on its face and handle, and on the larger plate is the following inscription: "Made from apron log of first mill built north of the Missouri River, on Peno, Pike County, by Enoch Matson, in 1817; presented to CHAMP CLARK, first Speaker of the House of Representatives from Missouri, by his constituents in Ralls County, 1911." On the other plate is the following quotation from one of Mr. CLARK's recent speeches and often used by him: "He serves his party best who serves his country well."

With the growth of the country and the clearing of the forest the water supply of Peno Creek became periodically insufficient to run the mill there, and Mr. Matson in after years abandoned this mill and put up another water mill on the bank of Salt River, where he followed the milling business for many years, and the ruins of this second mill are still to be seen.

DAVID WALLACE.

[Applause.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure, on behalf of your own constituents, as an evidence of their confidence and esteem, in presenting to you at this time this gavel. [General applause.]

The SPEAKER. The first legislature of the State of Missouri did two remarkable things. The first was to elect David Barton United States Senator unanimously. That performance has been repeated a few times, notably in Michigan on one occasion. Then there was a prolonged deadlock for the other Senatorship. Colonel Thomas Hart Benton, one of the greatest of all American statesmen, Judge J. B. C. Lucas, whose son Benton had killed in a duel, and several other distinguished men were competitors for that place. The fight was intensely bitter. At last the legislature did a thing that has never been duplicated, and in all human probability never will be duplicated. They asked David Barton, the Senator elect, to pick his senatorial mate. He chose Colonel Benton, but the fight was so bitter that even after Barton picked him there was a prolonged struggle.

The legislature was holding its sessions in the lower story of the old St. Louis Hotel, the upper stories being used for hotel purposes. Hon. Daniel Ralls, one of the representatives of Pike County, the county in which I live, was sick unto death in one of the rooms upstairs. In the legislature they lacked 1 vote of having enough to elect Benton on the last ballot they took on Saturday. That night they got a French representative, by the name of Phillip Leduc, out and agonized with him all night to induce him to vote for Benton. He had sworn that he would have his arm cut off at the shoulder before he would do it. They induced him to vote for Benton by stating to him that Benton represented all the French land claimants out there, and Leduc was one of them. At about sun up on Sunday morning he finally agreed to vote for Benton. That would elect Benton, provided Daniel Ralls lived until noon on Monday, and the question uppermost in the public mind of St. Louis that day was to inquire after Daniel Ralls's health. He lived until noon on Monday. Four colored men carried him down into the legislative hall on a mattress. The last act of his life was to vote for Benton. They carried him back upstairs and he was dead within an hour. That legislature, out of gratitude for his services, cut a slice out of Pike County nearest her heart and constituted it into a new county, named Ralls County, in honor of Daniel Ralls.

David Barton and Col. Benton came to Washington and drew straws for the six-year and four-year terms. Benton drew the six-year straw, was reelected four times, and was the first man who ever served 30 years in the Senate of the United States. Senator Barton drew the four-year term, was reelected for six years, quarreled with Gen. Jackson, and that was the end of him, as it was of most men who quarreled with Gen. Jackson. Benton had nothing to do with promising Leduc assistance about the French land-grant claims, knew nothing about it, and so soon as he was elected called his clients together, retired from the cases, and refused even to nominate an attorney to succeed himself, on the ground that he might have to vote in the Senate on the subject; so jealous was he of his honor and reputation.

There is no better citizenship on the face of the earth than the people who live in the ninth congressional district of Missouri. [Applause.] The elder Matson, one of Washington's soldiers, who went out there a pioneer, was a type of the pioneers who settled that country, and it is fitting, meet, and proper to reflect on the simple beginning of that mill, which has developed into the splendid civilization that exists there now. I am not very old, but I myself have ridden astride of a horse on a sack of corn to an old-fashioned horse mill. [Applause.]

I thank the people of Ralls County for presenting to me this gavel. I will treasure it so long as I live and then transmit it to my son. I hope my friends in Ralls will be as enthusiastic about me when I finally lay it down as they are now.

With honest pride the gift I take,
And prize it for the givers' sake.

[Applause.]

MESSENGER TO SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which we passed the resolution (H. Res. 31) on yesterday afternoon affecting the messenger at the table of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to reconsider the resolution passed concerning the messenger at the Speaker's desk yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 68) to create a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That a special joint committee be appointed, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to the appointed by the Speaker, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the statutory revision commission heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including all laws of a general nature, permanent in character, passed since the submission to Congress on December 15, 1906, of the final report of said commission; and that the said joint commission be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary; all such expenses to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman first whether the resolution limits the duration of the commission to this Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. The resolution is in the exact form that has been twice approved and passed by previous Congresses, and is, in the contemplation of myself and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], intended to continue the commission only for the life of this Congress.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands, of course, as we all do, that it has been supposed that the joint commission heretofore created expired with the end of the Congress. If this is in the precise language of the former resolution, I have no objection to it, although on its face it would seem to create a commission which would exist hereafter.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is absolutely in the language of the former resolution and is not intended to create a commission to live beyond the life of this Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if I correctly understood the gentleman from Kentucky to say that this committee is to be appointed by the Speaker?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a joint committee, to be appointed from the Members of the Senate by the President of the Senate and from the Members of the House by the Speaker of the House, being a select committee and therefore not in contravention of the rule adopted yesterday.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have not the slightest objection to the appointment of the committee by the Speaker, but it seems to me that, to be in harmony with the doctrine advocated yesterday by that side of the House, the committee ought to be elected by the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if he will read the rule with some degree of care he will not make that statement.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have read the rule and heard the speeches, and I think, in order to be consistent with the doctrine there advocated, the committee should be elected by the House and not appointed by the Speaker. Personally, I have no objection to the appointment by the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the rule presented and adopted yesterday did provide for the election of the House Members to the Joint Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers, of which the gentleman from Maryland is one of the honored members, and has been acting in the past by virtue of the law which provides that the Speaker shall appoint that committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman's statement be accurate, it is sufficient answer to say that this is a joint committee designated for a special purpose and for a limited time.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be a sufficient answer to say that this is correct, and that the House yesterday made an unintentional mistake, because it was not informed on a particular subject.

Mr. BUTLER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. About how much will it cost the Government to maintain this commission?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can tell the gentleman what it has cost and what it should cost. It has cost for four years about $15,000 a year. But it is fair to say on behalf of those who had charge of the joint committee—and they were members of the gentleman's own party—that there was considerable work done that will simplify very materially the work to be done in this Congress. It is also fair to say to the gentleman that not in a generation have two bills of such magnitude, embracing such a wide field, been passed as what was known as the penal code bill and the judiciary title bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the country and the House gave the gentleman's committee full credit for the passage of those bills. I will ask the gentleman, further, what use is there for this commission now?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not a commission, if the gentleman will permit me. A commission existed some years ago, and upon my motion was abolished. What is now created is simply a joint committee of the House and the Senate, the purpose being to enable both the Senate and the House Members to act in concert, the matter being largely codification and revision, and by acting in concert to have the two Houses consider the matter practically at the same time, and thus make possible the enactment of this very important legislation.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not contemplated that the commission shall last longer than this term of Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. As I have said, it is not a commission, but simply a committee of the House and of the Senate with the power of sitting together.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. What is to be accomplished by this joint committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. I answer the gentleman by saying that it is a continuation of the work heretofore done. We have now passed the penal code, which embraces all the penal laws of a general nature; we have passed that part of the judicial title which relates to the organization of the courts. We have yet remaining that part of the judiciary title which affects procedure, and we then have the Federal statutes on such subjects as internal-revenue law, the customs law, the Navy Department, the War Department, and various other departments.

It was contemplated in the beginning and it is hoped now by continuing this work to put within three or four small volumes the entire statute law of the United States that now must be sought for in forty-odd different volumes.

Mr. FINLEY. Why can not the Committee on the Judiciary do that work?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman by saying that, unquestionably, it could do it as well as could the Committee on Military Affairs, or any other committee, but this Committee on Revision of the Laws was created because its duty is not so much, as is the duty of the Committee on the Judiciary, to create new law as to codify, and every codification that has been made of United States law, and all that I know of that have been made in the States, have been made by special committees created for the purpose of codifying.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman says that it will cost about $15,000 a year.

Mr. SHERLEY. I said it had.

Mr. FINLEY. What will it cost?

Mr. SHERLEY. My own judgment is that in the future it will cost considerably less than that. I can not answer definitely, and simply answer the gentleman in this way. The work that committee does is of the very highest order and the clerical help, if it is to be of any value, must be of a high grade.

Mr. FINLEY. What is the nature of the expense?

Mr. SHERLEY. The nature of the expense is the employment of clerical and legal aid of a highly trained character. You can not get high-grade men at small salaries to do high-grade work. A mistake in this codification might cost the Government untold sums of money. It may cause confusion in all the courts of the land, and it is small economy to deny to a committee the proper aid.

Mr. FINLEY. What are some of the salaries paid to the help for this joint committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. Heretofore there has been one man who has been sent by the Department of Justice, who was paid $5,000 a year.

Mr. FINLEY. What is his name?

Mr. SHERLEY. His name is Locke. One man has been employed at the instance of the Senate, who has been paid $5,000 a year.

Mr. FINLEY. What is his name?

Mr. SHERLEY. Heyburn. There have been two other clerks and stenographers who have been employed from time to time. Now, it is my intention that there shall not be employed at this work, outside of occasional stenographic work which might have to be done, beyond three men.

Mr. FINLEY. Who appoints these gentlemen?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is left with the joint committee. They have been appointed heretofore by the joint committee upon the motion of the chairman of the House committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to pass the resolution just read.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit, I desire to say that if he makes a motion to pass this resolution, I would have to make a point of order. It is not privileged, so far as I can see. If it is a question of unanimous consent, that is something else.

Mr. SHERLEY. What else is there ahead of it in privilege?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know that there is anybody objecting. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, and that is whether the Committee on Revision of the Laws has a clerk?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws, I understand, has a clerk.

Mr. OLMSTED. What will he be doing while these high-priced clerks are doing the work?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will have to ask a member of the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

Mr. OLMSTED. Why can not the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the House and the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the Senate prepare and report this bill just as well as the committee the gentleman seeks to have appointed?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can tell the gentleman why it did not do it. In the old days, when you had a House and Senate committee, the result simply was that they acted without any degree of concert, and frequently matter was considered in one House that had not been considered by the committee in the other body, and before the proper committee could consider matter that runs into hundreds of pages, and frequently thousands of pages, the session of Congress had died. Now, it was for the purpose of facilitating this enactment that we created a joint committee, and the result was that whereas you had these committees for a decade and had no legislation, the moment you created a joint committee, that seriously went to work, inside of four years, in two Congresses, they have codified two of the most important branches of the general law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would the gentleman from Kentucky be willing to limit the salaries to be paid to these clerks or the number of clerks to be employed?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection, but it seems to me to be hardly gracious on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely——

Mr. SHERLEY (continuing). That when his colleague [Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania] offered this resolution it was left to his discretion, and now the gentleman requests that there shall be put in this resolution a requirement that the salaries shall be limited.

Mr. OLMSTED. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered the resolution, it was objected to from that side, and now that we have entered upon an era of economy I want to see how it is working.

Mr. SHERLEY. It went through twice without objection from this side. Now, as far as I am concerned, I simply say to the House that for my part I have no desire that a dollar should be expended that is not needed, and I submit to any man here who has ever been engaged in work of this magnitude that it is not work that can be successfully done by cheap men.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the regular order.

Mr. FINLEY. I have objected.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have moved, if I am recognized, that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina on his point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that proposes to appoint a joint committee. The gentleman from Kentucky has asked unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution. Objection was made. Then the gentleman moved that the joint committee be appointed; so, Mr. Speaker, this is the morning hour—I do not make the point that this committee——

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I desire to ask the mover of this resolution a question bearing on it. Was not there a commission appointed some time in 1897 or 1898 for the purpose of codifying the laws?

Mr. SHERLEY. There was and that commission——

Mr. CULLOP. And at large salaries?

Mr. SHERLEY. And that commission was abolished, on my motion, because it seemed never to come any nearer to finishing its work.

Mr. CULLOP. They never did anything except draw their salaries.

Mr. SHERLEY. And because this work had to be gone all over again we abolished that expensive commission, and we created a joint committee. I do not know a Member of this House who was a Member of previous Congresses but who knows there has been labor of the very greatest magnitude performed by that joint committee.

Mr. CULLOP. That is what they are elected for, I presume.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter brought up at this time is to appoint a special joint committee. The committees of the House are provided for, and while I do not make the point it is out of order to appoint this special committee in this way—I do not make that point—but I make the point it is not in order at this time. It is not business properly in order during the morning hour and besides that it is a matter that is not necessary from any standpoint——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I make the point of order the gentleman does not know what he is talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARLIN. As this is a change of statute law it occurs to me under the rule it would have to be referred to a committee, and I therefore make the point of order that this ought to go to a committee

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will be perfectly fair to the Chair, I do not think it is in order under the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia is well taken. Clause 3, Rule 22, provides that resolutions shall be introduced by delivering them to the Speaker. The point of order is sustained.

RATIFICATION OF INCOME-TAX AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications announcing the ratification of the constitutional amendment relative to the taxation of incomes:

STATE OF IOWA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Des Moines, March 16, 1911.

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE,
Congress of United States, Washington, D. C.

SIR: By direction of Gov. Carroll, of Iowa, I am inclosing herewith certified copy of a joint resolution passed by our last general assembly, and relating to the income-tax amendment.

Respectfully, yours,
C. C. NYE,
Secretary to the Governor.

STATE OF IOWA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, greeting:

I, B. F. Carroll, governor of the State of Iowa, do hereby certify that the attached document is a true and correct copy of a joint resolution known as house joint resolution No. 1; that the same has passed both houses of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa and has been approved by me as governor of the State.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused to be affixed an impression of the great seal of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines, the capital of the State, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.]
B. F. CARROLL,
Governor of Iowa.

Attest:
W. C. HAYWARD,
Secretary of State.

Joint resolution ratifying the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by Congress as the sixteenth amendment thereto, relative to laying and collecting a tax on income.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-first Congress of the United States of America, at its first session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"'ARTICLE XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.'"

Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State at Washington and to presiding officers of each House of the National Congress.

PAUL E. STILLMAN,
Speaker of the House.
GEORGE W. CLARKE,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that this joint resolution originated in the house, and is known as house joint resolution No. 1.

C. R. BENEDICT,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Approved, February 27, 1911.

B. F. CARROLL, Governor.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Lansing, March 17, 1911.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Under separate registered mail I am forwarding you house joint resolution No. 1 of the Michigan Legislature of 1911 relative to taxation of incomes and ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I am, sir, very respectfully,
SHEHAM R. OAKES,
Secretary to the Governor.

House joint resolution 1—Relative to the taxing of incomes and ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Whereas the Congress of the United States, after solemn and mature deliberation therein, has, by a vote of two-thirds of both houses, passed a concurrent resolution, submitting to the legislatures of the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States, which resolution is in the following words:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"'ARTICLE XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.'"

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, That in the name and behalf of the people of this State, we do hereby ratify, approve, and assent to the said amendment.

Resolved, That a copy of this assent and ratification, engrossed on parchment, be transmitted by his excellency the governor to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, and to the Secretary of State of the United States.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the house of representatives January 19, 1911.

H. F. BAKER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
PAUL H. KING,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the senate February 23, 1911.

JOHN Q. ROSS,
President of the Senate.
E. V. CHILSON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Attest:
CHASE S. OSBORNE, Governor.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as the committees are not made up yet, and I wish to give time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to make up his list of committees, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourns to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourns to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 10, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Librarian of Congress, transmitting a special report relating to the establishment of a Legislative Reference Bureau (S. Doc. No. 7), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

By Mr. POST: A bill (H. R. 2592) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Washington Court House, in the State of Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H. R. 2593) to amend an act authorizing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of Union soldiers who have been interred in private, village, or city cemeteries, as approved February 3, 1870; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ESTOPINAL: A bill (H. R. 2594) providing for the appointment of an additional professor of mathematics in the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BURLESON: A bill (H. R. 2595) putting bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics, suitable for covering cotton, composed of single yarns made in whole or in part of jute, jute butts, hemp, seg. Russian seg, New Zealand tow, aloe or mill waste on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 2596) putting grain, buff, split, rough, and sole leather, boots and shoes made wholly or in chief value from cattle hides or cattle skins, and harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather, band, bend, or belting leather, on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 2597) putting salt imported into the United States on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 2598) putting wire nails or staples made of wrought iron or steel, horseshoe nails, horse or mule shoes, made of wrought iron or steel, round iron or steel wire not smaller than No. 13 wire gauge, and round iron or steel wire smaller than No. 13 and not smaller than No. 16 wire gauge, and barbed fence wire, and hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity, on the free list; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 2599) for the erection of a public building at the city of Red Bluff, State of California, and appropriating moneys therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BATES: A bill (H. R. 2600) authorizing that commission of ensign be given midshipmen upon graduation from the Naval Academy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GOEKE: A bill (H. R. 2601) for the erection of a public building at Delphos, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 10, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Assistant Secretary read the following:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
April 10, 1911.

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, Senator from Michigan, to perform the duties of the Chair.

WM. P. FRYE,
President Pro Tempore.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan thereupon took the chair as presiding officer.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

VESSEL SCHOONER "APOLLO."

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of fact and conclusions of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the vessel schooner Apollo, Richard H. Richards, master (H. Doc. No. 6), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, favoring the ratification of arbitration treaties with Great Britain, France, and other leading nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, favoring the creation of a permanent tariff board and also the ratification of the pending reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the committee of the Robert Emmet celebration, held at Passaic, N. J., remonstrating against the ratification of a new arbitration treaty between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Church of the Brethren of Hartman, Colo., and Mount Ida, Kans.; of the Ministerial Association of Franklin, Pa.; and of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Mitchell, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of opium and cocaine in the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM presented memorials of Local Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Peoria; of the Alta Farmers' Elevator Co., of Alta; and of sundry citizens of Holder and Champaign County, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a bundle of coupons signed by policyholders in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., New York, in favor of the establishment of a national department of health. It seems to be a propaganda on the part of that company, but the petitions should be received. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW presented memorials of the National State Grange; of Local Grange No. 1455, of Fontana; and of Local Grange No. 1461, of Westphalia, all of the Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I present resolutions adopted at a State convention held in the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak., April 4, 1911. Mass meetings were held in every county in the State for the purpose of electing delegates to this convention. It was a nonpartisan one—Republicans, Democrats, and Socialists participating in the meeting. I am informed that it was the most harmonious and the most numerously attended convention ever held in the State. After the pending agreement known as the reciprocity agreement had been thoroughly discussed and was fully understood, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted. I ask that they may be read and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

We, the farmers and business men of North Dakota in convention assembled, protest against the ratification by the Congress of the United States of the pending trade agreement with Canada. In view of this attitude, the following declarations and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

(1) That it is unfair and unjust to the agricultural interests, offering to them no semblance of reciprocal equivalent in return for what it purposes to give.

(2) That it will bring suffering and disaster to a very large number of our producers with no hope that the price of bread will be lowered to the consumer.

(3) That the duty on barley will accrue in benefit solely to the brewer, incurring great loss to the producer.

(4) That it places our farmers in the position of competing in our own home markets with an alien people, upon conditions most advantageous to our competitors.

(5) That the Canadian producer, with his cheaper land, requires smaller investment, while his new, virgin soil returns greater yields with cheaper tillage, making the per bushel cost of his product much less than ours.

(6) That it "blazes the way" for the emigration of thousands of our people and millions of our wealth to a foreign field.

(7) That it will reduce farm values, increasing the burden of the debtor, destroy incentive for the greater development of farm production, and lure to alien benefit untold millions of our wealth that should and would accrue to this and future generations if employed in the development of those vast, untilled acres that lie between the Mississippi River and the Pacific within our own borders.

(8) That it will lower the standard of farm life, reducing it to one of drudgery, lessen the opportunities for the better education of farm children, and drive from, instead of encouraging them to remain upon the farm.

(9) That it will lessen the purchasing power of our own producers, and by so doing, the commercial interests will suffer a greater loss than can possibly be overcome by any gain in trade with Canada.

(10) That in trading our home markets of over 90,000,000 people (markets that are abundantly supplied by our own producers; markets that have been largely made and earned, and which, by every right and heritage, belong to our own producers), for that of 8,000,000 Canadians with its doubtful increased advantage to the commercial and manufacturing interests, is not only unfair and unjust, but reprehensible.

Adopted this 4th day of April, 1911.

R. S. LEWIS, Chairman,
THEO. B. ELTON, Secretary,
North Dakota Anti-Reciprocity Convention.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented memorials of Burritt Grange, No. 39, of New Britain; Local Grange No. 21, of Lebanon; Local Grange No. 171, of Mystic; Local Grange No. 158, of Chester; Local Grange No. 157, of East Lynne; Wichita Grange No. 132, of Warren; Local Grange No. 108, of Woodbridge; Unity Grange, No. 117, of Deep River; Local Grange No. 122, of Watertown; Farmill River Grange, No. 130, of Huntington; Senexet Grange, No. 40, of Woodstock; Local Grange No. 44, of Newington; Local Grange No. 75, of Coventry; Local Grange No. 176, of Groton; Local Grange No. 149, of Easton; Local Grange No. 112, of Killingly; Matabesset Grange, No. 42, of Middletown; Local Grange No. 82, of Colebrook; Local Grange No. 119, of Morris; Local Grange No. 154, of Kent; Local Grange No. 131, of Columbia; Local Grange No. 72, of Plymouth; Konomoc Grange, No. 41, of Waterford; Local Grange No. 136, of East Canaan; Local Grange No. 70, of Canterbury; Shetucket Grange, No. 69, of Scotland; Local Grange No. 170, of Gaylordsville; Woodstock Grange, No. 150, of North Woodstock; Local Grange of New Canaan; Local Grange of Glastonbury; Local Grange of Colchester; Local Grange of Ledyard; and of Local Grange of Winchester, all of the Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULBERSON. By special request, I present a memorial signed by 488 citizens of El Paso County, Tex., which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., February 28, 1911.

To President W. H. Taft and the honorable Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, greeting:

We, the undersigned citizens of the city of El Paso and bona fide residents of the State of Texas, being a liberty loving people, and believing in and espousing the cause of liberty in all that term implies, and being opposed to the suppression of liberty at home and abroad, and, further, believing it to be a God-given right and that this liberty should not only be enjoyed by the people of the United States, but by all the nations of the earth, we most respectfully submit our names and most earnestly and solemnly request that the United States take no steps or interest in the revolution which is being waged in the Republic of Mexico at present, and if any steps have been taken which would in any manner or in any degree interfere with the revolutionists or insurrectos, we respectfully request that such action or such steps may be rescinded at once.

Believing with all that is in us that this is a struggle for existence, for life, and for liberty on the part of the insurrectos.

Respectfully submitted.

By Mr. OWEN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) approving the constitutions formed by the constitutional conventions of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona; to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. WORKS. I introduce a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 11) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver a condemned cannon to the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to deliver to the order of Col. D. R. Stowits, quartermaster general of the Grand Army of the Republic, one dismounted, condemned bronze cannon, used in the Civil War, to be used by the Grand Army of the Republic for the purpose of furnishing official badges of the order: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States through the delivery of said condemned cannon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the joint resolution ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROPOSED CHANGE IN THE HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to submit a notice of a resolution proposing certain amendments to the rules. I ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 12), as follows:

NOTICE TO AMEND THE RULES.

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be, and are hereby, amended as follows:

Amend Rule VII by striking out all after the word "for," in line 7, down to and including the word "resolutions," in line 11.

Beginning with the word "pension," in the first line of section 2 of Rule VII, strike out all down to and including the word "hour," in line 3 of said section, and insert the words "bills and report of a committee."

Strike out all of the second paragraph of section 2.

Amend Rule VIII by striking out the figure "2" in the first line of the second paragraph and inserting the figure "3."

Amend Rule VIII by striking out, in line 4, the figure "2" and insert the figure "3."

Amend Rule IX by striking out the figure "2" in the second line and inserting the figure "3."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I only desire to say that those are amendments to the rules which will be made necessary if the Senate should determine to amend its standing order and meet at 2 instead of 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Texas asks that the resolution lie upon the table?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken.

TREATY OF 1832 WITH RUSSIA.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, on the 21st of February last I introduced a resolution looking to the abrogation of the treaty of 1832 with Russia. I reintroduce the resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is short, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution, as requested.

The resolution (S. Res. 13) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the treaty of 1832 between the United States and Russia should be abrogated because of the discrimination by Russia between American citizens in the administration of the treaty.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 8), which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 13 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I submit herewith an act of the Philippine Legislature amending the public-land laws of the Philippine Islands by specifying the officials before whom the final evidence to perfect homestead grants may be taken. The law as it stands requires applicants for homesteads to furnish certain affidavits, but does not indicate the officials before whom they may be executed.

The amendment seems essential to a proper understanding by homesteaders as to what is required of them. I have therefore approved the act in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress above mentioned.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 10, 1911.

RULINGS OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 10), submitted by Mr. DAVIS on the 6th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be required and directed to furnish to the Senate copy of the rulings of his department, and his reasons therefor, in regard to the circulation of the Woman's National Weekly; also the Harpoon, of Denver, two newspapers published in the United States, inasmuch as serious charges are made against said rulings, as is shown by letter attached and made a part of this resolution; that said information be furnished to the Senate at the earliest possible convenience of the department.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit, for the information of the Senate, a letter from one of my constituents. I ask that it be read for the information of the Senate, or, if preferred, that it may be printed in the RECORD. I also have a clipping, which is quite lengthy, relating strictly to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the letter to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir. I want to say, Mr. President, that the only object of the resolution is that the Post Office Department shall furnish the Senate its reasons for discriminating against the two papers referred to. I know that the Woman's National Weekly, formerly a daily, has a large circulation in my State, and I am constantly receiving a great many complaints, especially from the ladies of my State, asking why the Post Office Department has arbitrarily ordered this paper to discontinue 103,000 copies of its circulation. This paper is sent to ladies of the country and to friends largely by other people—for instance, each Member of the Senate might send to others 10 or a hundred copies of the paper. It is a very cheap paper, devoted to literature, art, education, domestic duties, and matters of that kind. It seems that the Post Office Department contends that the person receiving the paper must pay for it himself. I want to know why this ruling has been made. Therefore I ask that the resolution be adopted directing the Post Office Department to furnish us the information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas presents a communication, together with a clipping, which he asks may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read, Mr. President.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to having it read. It is quite lengthy, but it relates entirely to the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I desire that the resolution be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts requests that the resolution be again read. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary again read the resolution of Mr. DAVIS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, what is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Arkansas is that the communication which he has sent to the Secretary's desk may be printed in the RECORD. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

HARRISON, ARK., April 3, 1911.

Hon. JEFF DAVIS,
Senator from Arkansas.

MOST HONORABLE SIR: I am a full-paid member of the American Woman's League; subscribed for the Woman's National Daily, and paid for it with my own hard-earned money. Because it was a clean, pure, honest, moral, educational paper I sent it to some of my friends whom I was under obligations to for similar favors. Since they received it, the most of them have paid me for it, because they found it met the demands of the tired, busy housewife and mother in her own home in that it was small, easily handled, no extra advertising sheets to litter up the house, clean, pure, and inspiring to higher ideals in honesty, refinement, and culture along all lines that make for the best type of womanhood and manhood.

Now, because some of Uncle Sam's employees think that too many such people are reading such a clean, pure, little paper daily, he raises the rate of postage and says 103,000 of these readers shall not have their paper.

I have a right to demand that the United States mails bring me my mail if I pay, or am willing to pay, the same postage that other people pay for the same kind of mail or literature. That the Government has no right to stop, or raise the postage on it as long as it is paid for; and a clean, moral, newsy paper is what we demand in the name of liberty and justice in this the land of the free and home of the brave.

We mothers and wives have, through that little paper and the league, been given greater opportunities for the education of ourselves and children than any State can give us, because the time and place to secure an education could not be had for lack of means. It has opened wide the doors for higher education in art, music, business, domestic science, and every line of education given to-day by correspondence, and as citizens of these United States of America we demand that our rights be given us and humbly beg your honorable self to do all within your power to secure for us our rights in working, praying, and fighting to have the postage reduced and the restricted number be allowed to receive their paper. The last two papers have been filled with advertising matter to meet the extra postage. We trust that the spirit of liberty, justice, and honor is still alive in the hearts and minds of our Representatives and that you will see that this postal law is righted.

Sincerely,

MRS. DANNIE MAGGARD BAKER.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I am informed that one of the publications named in the resolution is now under investigation, and it seems to me, therefore, there should be added to the resolution the language "if not incompatible with the public interest." If that addition be made, I have no objection to the adoption of the resolution. I think the department should clearly state the ruling it has made. Does the Senator from Arkansas object to that?

Mr. DAVIS. I do. Mr. President, I am not ordinarily the champion of newspapers. I have received no kindness nor consideration at their hands. I have been hounded and dogged by these emissaries of advanced thought until the epidermis has become a little bit raw; but it seems to me that here are two worthy newspapers. One is the Woman's National Weekly, purely a home paper, and as to the other, while the Senator from Ohio has said it is under investigation, I may say that it has under investigation certain Federal officials in the columns of its paper, and is making certain exposures that I think are entirely proper, if true; exposures that go to the very root of things; exposures that ought to be made, if the charges are true, and if not, there is a proper mode of suppression. Therefore I think the papers, especially the paper for the benefit of the homes and families of the country, ought to be given the widest circulation, no matter who pays for them, no matter whether they are paid for directly by the person who receives them or by his friend or neighbor.

I certainly think, Mr. President, that the Harpoon, of Denver, so long as it has the fight on its hands that it has, ought to be given the widest circulation and ought not to be restricted by arbitrary rulings of the Post Office Department. To say that this resolution shall be answered, provided it is not incompatible with the public service, is simply to say to the Post Office Department, "You may refuse to answer if you so elect; if some little spirit of delicacy prompts you to do so, you may refuse to answer it." No, sir, I want this resolution passed as it is, and let the Post Office Department say to the Senate why it is——

Mr. BURTON. I yielded to the Senator from Arkansas merely for an answer to a question. I have no objection, however, to his proceeding for a reasonable time during the course of my remarks.

Mr. DAVIS. I am through, sir. Mr. President, I have finished. I want this resolution passed as it is, and let the Post Office Department say to the Senate why these unreasonable and unheard of restrictions are placed against these two publications.

Mr. BURTON. I do not care to enter into the merits of this particular controversy. I will only say, in passing, that it is evident that the writer of the letter, whose epistle is set forth here on page 91, must have been laboring under some misapprehension. He says that objection was made and the sending of papers was withheld in a hundred thousand cases where the papers were subscribed for by relatives and friends. It shows a very unusual assistance from relatives and friends, which enlarges the subscriptions to the extent of a hundred thousand copies.

What I wish to call attention to, however, is the precedent that would be established by passing this resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. To enlighten the Senator from Ohio on the question as to the 103,000 subscriptions, I ask that the clipping from the paper of Mr. Lewis be read to the Senate for its information, together with the so-called ruling of the Post Office Department.

Mr. BURTON. I prefer to proceed. The point to which I wish to call attention, which furnishes the substantial objection here, is this: We would, by passing this resolution, make it possible, whenever a publication was under investigation, even under criminal accusation—under any accusation—for it to come here and make a demand upon the Post Office Department to give its reasons for its proceedings, and thus unfold to the public and give to those against whom the department is proceeding, or whose transactions it is investigating, all the facts and circumstances upon which a possible prosecution might be based.

It seems to me, Mr. President, we can not for a moment think of establishing such a precedent, and I therefore move as an amendment that there be added at the end of the resolution the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me for a moment, I will be through.

There is no criminal charge pending against the Woman's Weekly Journal, published by Mr. Lewis. The Post Office Department has given him a pretended reason there for the taking away of 103,000 of his circulation, and the reason is simply puerile and silly. There is no criminal prosecution pending and no criminal investigation being had.

It is a woman's paper, published purely for women, for their education and enlightenment and their home use, and now the Post Office Department simply says "You can not let one of your friends send out 50 copies of this paper and pay for it at 25 cents a year." It says so there, as shown by the report of the department. "You can not let one of your friends send out 50 or 100 copies of this paper to his friends." A Senator could not send a hundred copies of this paper to his friends and pay for it. That has brought this paper under the ban of the Post Office Department, and they arbitrarily say to Mr. Lewis "You must cut off 103,000 of your subscribers which we find are unpaid subscribers."

I am receiving letters constantly from people in my State saying "We have paid for this paper, and it is being cut off by the Post Office Department under this arbitrary ruling. We want to know why it is so." That relates purely to this woman's paper.

As regards the other, if the Senate of the United States wants to interpose whitewash proceedings here as against charges that are being fought out by the Harpoon, of Denver, against certain Federal officials, the sooner the country knows it the better. The paper is making certain charges against certain Federal officials. I do not know whether they are true or false, but there is a fight on between them. But if the charges are not true, let these Federal officials show it to the country. If they are true, the officials ought to be turned out of office; and I say that the Senate of the United States is in no position to-day to take the side of a whitewash proceeding and say that the Post Office Department shall not furnish this information to the Senate and to the country.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have no information such as would give me a very definite opinion as to the merits of the particular matter being discussed by the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Ohio. I think, however, that the Senate should determine definitely whether or not it desires this information, and it is simply with reference to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio that I desire to say a word to the Senate.

It is not in accord with the practice of the Senate, it is not in harmony with what I may say is the uniform, unvarying practice of the Senate, to add the words which are now suggested by the Senator from Ohio, except in case of communications addressed to the State Department, and the reason for that is manifest. Matters within the jurisdiction of the State Department frequently concern relations between this Government and foreign Governments which are necessarily of a nature where their publication may sometimes be not compatible with the public interest. Therefore whenever a request is addressed to the President of the United States it is the custom of the Senate not only when it relates to foreign affairs, but to any other affairs, as a matter of courtesy, to say to the President of the United States that the request is made if it is not incompatible with the public interest, and whenever addressed to the Secretary of State, he having charge of that particular branch of the governmental functions which relates to foreign affairs, it is the custom to add the words. But it is not the custom in case the direction is given to any other of the departments.

Now, I wish to say, Mr. President, that in the days when I first had the honor to come into the Senate there was no possible question upon this subject, and the men from whom I first learned that such was the practice were men who had been of the longest experience in the Senate. I recollect that the first Senator from whom I ever heard the objection made when a similar amendment was proposed, or when the original resolution had come in to that effect, was Mr. Sherman of Ohio, who sat only three seats, I think, to the right of where the present Senator sits, though possibly I may be mistaken about that; the seat to the immediate right of the seat of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The statement was then made by him that the Senate, except in cases where it desired to get information from the State Department, should always "direct" the department as to what it wished to have done and not leave it to the discretion of the department; that it was not consistent with the necessities of the Senate in dealing with the large public affairs which were committed to it to have it in the discretion of the head of a department to say whether he would or would not comply with such a direction.

One of the Senators who was most insistent upon that rule was Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, than whom a more accomplished man, I think, never sat in the Senate, either before his day or subsequent to it. Possibly some men excelled him in some particulars, but I use the word "accomplished" with due regard to its weight, for I do not think a more accomplished man in all respects ever sat in the Senate; certainly not one who had a more just and proper conception of the attributes and functions and prerogatives of the Senate.

Therefore I hope that if the Senator from Ohio thinks the information should not be required, and the Senate agrees with him, it will determine it upon the question whether or not we want the information. If we do want the information, there ought to be a direction to the department in accordance with what I say has been the uniform, unvaried practice of the Senate, except in cases of matters within the charge and keeping of the State Department. If the Senate desire the information, we ought to direct it to be furnished. If we do not think it is proper information to be required, we ought not to pass the resolution.

I do not express any opinion as to whether or not the information should be required.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Is there not sometimes a third course adopted—to refer the resolution to the committee having the subject in charge——

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. To determine whether or not it is wise to make the inquiry?

Mr. BACON. I think that has frequently been done, and it is a very wise disposition of a doubtful matter rather than to leave it to the discretion of a department; and I think that might be the best direction to be given to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate? The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not an expert in the postal laws; I have no doubt the Senator from Arkansas has given this matter a great deal of consideration; but I should like to ask him whether it is not the case that gratuitous copies fall under a different class. For instance, if any one of us buys a thousand copies of a newspaper in circulation, I do not understand that we can send them at the pound rate. It has to be a legitimate subscription, and that applies alike to every publication. The Senator can tell me whether that is the law or not.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the very information we want. We want to know whether it is a just or unjust discrimination against the Woman's Weekly. My constituents claim that it is an unjust discrimination.

The Senator from Ohio says that the man who wrote me the letter, which accompanies the resolution, must be misinformed. Mr. R. M. Adams, of Ozark, Ark., is one of the best citizens of our State, a man of general information, a banker. He says that he has bought this paper, that he has paid the subscription price for a number of his friends, and the paper was sent to them.

Now, the Post Office Department makes the complaint that because each person receiving the paper does not himself pay for it, it falls under this ban. I say that is not just; that it is not fair.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand that he has paid a subscription for each paper?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. That is a different thing.

Mr. DAVIS. That is exactly the situation.

And to clarify this matter—I am in earnest about it—I ask that the clerk read the clipping from Mr. Lewis's paper for the information of the Senate. It will not be but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the clipping will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE REASON.

One hundred and three thousand paid-in-advance subscribers of this paper will fail to get it. Who they are we do not as yet know ourselves. The reason why they will not get it is shown below. When we temporarily changed the National Daily to a weekly, in accordance with the postal requirements, we made an application for a new entry. Seizing this opportunity to further hound this concern, the postal officials at Washington applied the extraordinary ruling that we must deposit third-class postage of 8 cents per pound, but also construed this to mean 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof and demanded that we pay postage at the rate of 1 cent per copy, or 17 cents per pound, nearly $5,000 per issue more than the lawful postage rate charged all other publishers. We refused flatly to submit to this outrage, and after many telegrams back and forth and the holding up of the issue for a week, we appealed direct by telegram to Postmaster General Hitchcock and asked him to give this paper lawful treatment and a square deal. The response was quick and to the point, and the following telegram was received Monday from Third Assistant Postmaster General Britt, who had previously demanded the exorbitant and unlawful postage and refused to reconsider his demand. Here is the message:

MARCH 27, 1911.

POSTMASTER, St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 27th of March, inclosing the copy of telegram from James J. Britt, Third Assistant Postmaster General, as follows:

"Application of publisher of the Woman's National Weekly, dated March 21, received to-day. Information in possession of the department obtained through queries to claimed subscribers to the publication indicates that at least 24 per cent thereof are not subscribers in fact. This is strongly corroborated by reports of nonacceptance of publication by alleged subscribers at many post offices throughout the country, as well as by the statement of the publisher in admitting that a large percentage are gift subscriptions and also by excessive use of premiums. You will inform publisher that upon removal of 24 per cent of the claimed list, 103,920, required deposit will be waived. Effective with date of application, pending further inquiry. Should the publisher desire to mail copies of the publication to persons whose names are eliminated from claimed list, they may be accepted at the transient second-class postage rate of 1 cent for each 4 ounces or fraction thereof, prepaid by stamps affixed. You will obtain the publishers' decision and report to this bureau immediately.

"JAMES J. BRITT,
"Third Assistant Postmaster General."

It seems that Mr. Britt objects to the "gift" subscriptions (subscriptions paid for by others as a gift). We have long warned our friends to be very careful about "gift" subscriptions, even furnishing a separate blank form for them. Of course this ruling that "gift" subscriptions are not legitimate is, as usual, applied to this paper only. The ridiculous part of the matter is that we are ordered to cut off 103,000 subscribers without being informed which ones to cut off. Not being mind readers, we can only bow our heads, chop off a hundred and three thousand subscribers with our eyes shut, and submit, so that the other hundreds of thousands may get their papers. We replied to Mr. Britt's telegram as follows:

"We beg to state that having no option in the matter other than to submit to the decision of the department or else face complete ruin and confiscation of our journal, we therefore must submit, under protest, and will reduce the amount of our mailings as required, by 103,920 copies, but as we are not informed as to which one of the subscribers on our list of more than 400,000 paid-in-advance subscribers are taken by the department to be illegitimate, we are, therefore, under the necessity of arbitrarily cutting off the required number of copies. As soon as the department will inform us which particular subscriptions the department takes exception to, we will eliminate these particular subscriptions and notify the subscriber of the reason therefor; but until so advised by the department as to which particular subscriptions it has taken exception to, we, of course, have no means of knowing which subscriptions they consider legitimate and which subscribers they do not, and must, therefore, mail the number permitted us arbitrarily without any power to conform to the department's requirement of eliminating objectionable subscriptions until such time as we are advised by the department which are the objectionable subscriptions. The result of this, of course, must be that many thousands of subscribers to whose subscriptions the department has taken no exception will fail to receive their papers, while many thousands of subscribers to whom the department has taken exception will continue to receive their papers until such a time as we are duly advised which to eliminate and which to retain. If the subscriptions to which the department has taken exception are those paid by others as gifts, if the department will so advise us, we can then intelligently eliminate such subscriptions from the list and explain the reason to the subscribers; but as we are not so advised by the department, but are simply arbitrarily directed to reduce our subscription list by 103,920 regardless of whether those so eliminated are bona fide paid-in-advance subscribers of lawful age and sound mind who have paid for the papers with their own money, or whether they are subscribers whose subscriptions have been paid for by others, we can only act to the best of our intelligence in the light of the information vouchsafed us. We will, therefore, proceed to mail the Woman's National Weekly to 351,580 of the subscribers on our list taken at random, and the remaining 103,920 subscribers eliminated will be obliged to whistle for their papers until the department vouchsafes us sufficient information to intelligently comply with its rulings. We therefore bow and submit under protest to the superior and arbitrary power of the department as outlined in this ruling.

"Thanking the department for the privilege accorded us of mailing to our subscribers at least a portion of the papers for which they have paid in advance,

"Very respectfully,
E. G. LEWIS."

If you or any of your friends fail to get their papers, don't blame us; we are doing the best we can under the oppressive and arbitrary rulings made for our particular benefit. There was no doubt but that it was intended to suppress and destroy this great newspaper, but the women of America again made themselves felt. We shall, however, do as we said we would—stay on the job of exposing the rottenness of Judge Goodwin's department until either Judge Goodwin succeeds in suppressing this newspaper or we succeed in lifting the lid off his department by a congressional investigation.

We desire to express our thanks to Mr. Hitchcock for the promptness and courtesy with which he dropped other pressing matters and took hold of our demand for lawful treatment. May he continue with the job until this newspaper is fully accorded the same treatment, rights, or "privileges" accorded all others. We never asked for anything else.

E. G. LEWIS.

N. B.—Write a few more letters to your Congressman. This is the second battle you have won for justice from the Post Office Department. Before we get through there may yet be a free press in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. Evidently this is a question as to what subscriptions are entitled to second-class privileges. Is that all there is of it?

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; it is a question as to whether or not this paper shall be stopped or whether it shall be printed to be sent out to patrons—the papers that are paid for, whether paid for by the persons receiving them or paid for by other people and sent to them in a complimentary way. They are all paid subscriptions, paid in cash, paid in advance.

Mr. BURTON. I had supposed that some other questions were involved, but I do not see more in it than a plain controversy in regard to the extent of the second-class privileges as to newspaper subscriptions. I think we had better refer the resolution to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I make that motion.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator what becomes of the amendment he proposed?

Mr. BURTON. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his amendment, and moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, to refer it to that committee means its death. There it sleeps "the sleep that knows no waking"; that is to say, it goes to a graveyard. If the Senate wants to adopt that course and wants to shirk the responsibility of calling on the department for this information, of course the Senate is at liberty to do it, but on the motion of the Senator from Ohio I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURTON. That is not the intention of the motion in any degree. This is rather a general question pertaining to all newspapers than to this specific one, and it is one on which perhaps there should be legislation defining and making clearer the rule to be adopted. I see no reason for calling on the Post Office Department for this specific information, and it might work a prejudice.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, just a word. I have some familiarity with this controversy between Mr. Lewis, the publisher of the Woman's Journal and the publisher of other papers as well, and the Post Office Department. I do not arise, however, to discuss that controversy or lay before the Senate the information in my possession.

I understand that there are two questions, as they might be designated, running through this controversy. One is as to the price at which the paper is sold to subscribers. It is claimed to be purely a nominal sum, and that it is issued as an advertising sheet rather than as a newspaper.

Another question is that the paper has been subscribed for and is sent out through the mails by persons other than those receiving it, and it is objected by the department that that is not permissive. The intention of the department is, I understand, that in order to make a publication admissible to the mails under the pound rate it must be subscribed for by the individual to whom it is sent and not by another and forwarded in a complimentary way.

I will not say anything about this latter phase or this second question involved in the controversy to which I have just addressed myself, but as to the first issue between the department and publisher—that is, as to the price at which the paper is sold and the contention that it is a mere advertising sheet—I wish to say that I know of papers printed daily in this country, some of them in my own State—great newspapers, as great newspapers as are printed in any section of the Union, with a great corps of correspondents scattered all over the continent, receiving the Associated Press dispatches, ably edited, ably conducted, with a large circulation—the price of which to the subscriber does not exceed that at which the Woman's Journal is sold to subscribers.

I have not heard of any objection coming from the Post Office Department against the admission of those great daily political journals to the mails. I have in mind now one publication of that character. It is hardly necessary to designate it, but the company which prints it publishes a journal in the morning and another in the afternoon, and these papers are scattered all over my State and all over Kansas and Oklahoma and Arkansas and go in large numbers into other States. Just before I returned to this session of Congress I had occasion to go to a news dealer in a town where I was sojourning for a short time and make arrangements to have the publication of which I am speaking, both the morning and the afternoon editions, sent to my room, and the two cost me only 10 cents a week, including the Sunday edition.

The point I wish to make, if there be any point to it, the objection I urge against this edict excluding the Woman's Journal from the mails, is that if it is to be the rule of the department it ought to be universal in its application. I see no reason why a weekly paper, and I believe this is a weekly journal——

Mr. DAVIS. It is.

Mr. STONE. I see no reason why a paper that is sent out to subscribers who are scattered through numerous States and read by the mothers and daughters of the land should be discriminated against when great political journals are put into the mail every day at a price equally low. I protest against that as a manifest injustice.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am rather prompted to seek information in this matter. I did not know that the Post Office Department held to it as a legal proposition that the person to whom the paper is sent must pay for it. Personally I have been all my life in the habit—and I assume that to be the case with many others in this Chamber and out of it—of subscribing to papers on behalf of others, where I desired that they should have the benefit of a certain class of journalism. In political times it is a common practice by both or all political parties.

I am rather astonished, if I correctly understand this situation, to be informed that the department maintains the position that one may not subscribe to a newspaper for another and receive the same benefits as to the rates of mail. I had never heard of it before.

I have received many circulars and documents in reference, I presume, to the papers that are included within this resolution. I have read some of them. I have read enough of them to give me a general understanding of the situation involved, but I did not know that it involved the question of the right of one person to subscribe for another. It should not. There is no more beneficial act performed by any part of the people than that of assisting through this means in the dissemination of knowledge of which they approve. It is perfectly legitimate.

I will not go into the question of the character of these papers because I do not know enough about it, but if it is applied to one class of papers it should be applied to all.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator a question, for I desire information, as he does. I should like to know whether these two papers are on the same plane and whether that is the whole difficulty? I understood that there was a criminal proceeding against one of them.

Mr. HEYBURN. In answer to the question of the Senator from Massachusetts I will say that through something that fell from the lips of the reading clerk in regard to the matter it appears that so far as the paper that is designated the Woman's Journal is concerned the objection is not based upon the character of the paper, because they concede the right of 45,000 copies of it to go through the mails that are not within this particular class of subscription, so that——

Mr. DAVIS. Three hundred and three thousand copies are excluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, whatever the number; any number of them; if 10 might go through the mails it could not be urged that the prohibition was because of the character of the paper.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not. That did not include the Harpoon, I understood.

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; it did not. I understood from the Senator from Massachusetts or from some Senator who has addressed the Chair on this question that probably there was a criminal investigation against the Harpoon. I do not know anything about that personally.

Mr. LODGE. That was suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. I suggested it merely as an illustration. I do not know of any criminal proceeding pending against either publication. I said, however, merely by way of illustration, that if criminal proceedings or any other were contemplated, the Government would show its case.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not take into consideration whether there was or was not a criminal proceeding existing. I was inquiring as to the legal proposition whether or not any part of the Government was authorized by law to say that one might not subscribe on behalf of another to a paper. If you can not subscribe on behalf of 100 or 1,000, you can not subscribe on behalf of one.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to know how the Senator would treat this case. I am in a business, and I wish to advertise it. I have to pay 1 cent on each circular I send out. But I start a newspaper, a nominal newspaper, for the purpose of advertising my business. I go to the editor or publisher with whom I arrange and I say, "I want to send out my circular. It will cost a cent to send out the circular. I want to give you an order for 100,000 copies of your paper. Your paper will have enough news matter to be a newspaper, but in reality the paper is to advertise my business. Here is my check for a hundred thousand subscribers. Send out the papers."

The purpose of this ruling on the part of the Government is to prevent such a procedure. I think the Senator will see how this matter may be abused very gravely. If you permit a man to subscribe for 100,000 copies for the purpose of advertising his business, as in the case of the Woman's Journal, he would furnish perhaps 100,000 subscribers and a premium be given with each subscription, and all at the rate of 10 cents.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not reached the consideration of the question of advertising, directly or indirectly, because that is a very large question, and its discussion would involve the consideration of not only newspapers, but of other classes of publications. I rose to the single inquiry as to whether any part of this Government was authorized to discriminate between the man who subscribed for one paper for one person and the man who subscribed for 100,000. The question whether it is a legitimate newspaper or not is not involved in this matter, at least it is not involved in my consideration of it, because that comes under a different provision of the law. It is competent, and we have provided the method of determining the fact, to discriminate between purely advertising sheets and newspapers.

I think they have a rule; but whether they have it or not, some one is authorized to determine it, because I, in common with other Senators, have had many letters from those who have been put to the test for the purpose of determining whether their newspapers were entitled to come in under newspaper rates or whether they should pay the rates that belong to an advertising sheet. I do not intend to pursue it that far, because that question is not necessarily involved in the issue I raised; but I should like to know from some one under what section of the statute, under what law, any part of the Government may say that one may not subscribe for another and have the paper go directly from the publisher to the beneficiary.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I ask the Senator if he can not readily see how easily a great abuse might be practiced upon the public and the department if a publisher having a real newspaper, if you wish to call it so, or some one who introduces enough news matter into a publication so that it becomes a newspaper, should permit an advertiser pure and simple, for no other purpose than to advertise his own wares, to give to the publisher his check for 100, or 200, or 500,000 copies, thus enabling him to reach a constituency as an advertiser purely under the guise of publishing a paper? Would not that be a fraud upon the department?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there are perhaps very few laws upon the statute books that might not be made the medium of doing wrong. My right to walk across the street might be questioned, because, forsooth, in doing so I might do wrong. That foundation for reasoning is not a very safe one, especially in regard to this matter.

My conscience was pricked at once when it was stated here that you might not hand to a publisher a list of names to whom you desired to send a paper and pay him for it, because I have done that during the greater portion of my life. I am now doing it, and I supposed that I was entirely within my legal rights when I did it. When I find that a publication is maintaining a high order of journalism and is a useful paper, I think of young men or others in different parts of the country whose minds I am anxious to have directed in the right course, and I frequently ask the publisher to send his paper for a year or some other period to a list of subscribers, and I pay for them. Is that to be a crime—for this action is based upon the proposition that this is a criminal proceeding? Such orders can only be issued against criminal proceedings. The question whether the paper is an advertising sheet or is a legitimate newspaper is far distant in the future consideration of this question.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I desire to say that his illustration is not apt, because this is not a fraud; it is a real, genuine newspaper, a wholesome journal, sent to the mothers and wives of our country for their weekly betterment. We do not give the women of this country many rights; we do not allow them to vote or to hold office; they have very little control of their domestic affairs; and of all the men on earth that ought not to object to a little latitude being given to the women of this country the Senator from Vermont is the last one, I think.

As I have said, this is a wholesome, clean paper. Why the department arbitrarily says "you must shut off 103,000 subscribers," without giving any rhyme or reason or the name of the subscribers, is more than I can understand.

It seems to me that we can discuss the merits of the proposition after the reply of the department shall have been given. I only ask by the resolution for information. Why the Senate should attempt to—I will not say it in an offensive sense, because I do not mean it in that way—thwart the object of the resolution by sending it to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I am at a loss to know. I want the information, and if the Senate agrees with me, I should like to have the resolution passed.

Can it be said that I can not go down town to-morrow morning and ask the publishers of the Washington Herald to send 10,000 copies of their paper to my constituents, giving their names and post-office addresses and my check for the money? Shall it be said that postage on that paper shall be increased, or that an edict shall go from the department that that is an improper subscription simply because I pay for it? Why, Mr. President, at every session of my legislature in Arkansas they appropriate 25 cents per diem for each member of the house and senate to pay the postage and subscription for two daily newspapers to send to their constituents. Shall that be said to be an improper subscription?

Sir, this is a most remarkable discussion here. I simply ask for a little information, and it brings up all this row. If the Senate does not want the information, refer the resolution to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; but if the Senate does want the information, then pass the resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it seems to me that we have launched upon the discussion of a very important question. I should like to know if it is not possible for the Post Office Department to invoke this same rule with reference to the club system that is almost universally used in this country by publishers in order to secure subscribers to their papers. That method is especially used with reference to the country press.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Alabama if he does not think it would be well, first, to have the statement of the department as to why it issued this order? The discussion has gone on for an hour or two here without any knowledge as to why the Postmaster General has issued the order that is complained of. It seems to me that the resolution which the Senator from Arkansas has introduced is all right. Let us have the reasons which the Postmaster General assigns for taking this position.

If it is thought wise that the resolution should first go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I can see no objection to that. The Senator from Alabama is a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I take it for granted he would favor reporting out the resolution. A great many important questions have been discussed, but none of us know the reason upon which the Postmaster General bases the order as affecting either of the publications in question. We are discussing at random something upon which we all have convictions, but we do not know what his purpose was at all. I would inquire of the Senator if he does not think it would be well to send the resolution either to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads or direct to the Postmaster General, and let us get the information, and then we can discuss it with more definite purpose?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas anticipates my motive and purpose. I rose merely for the purpose of suggesting the importance of this question and to add that, in my opinion, it deserves very careful consideration. There must be some evil at the back of this that ought to be developed and remedied. Therefore I rose for the purpose of suggesting that the resolution should properly go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and let them summon the Postmaster General or anybody else—they can do it very speedily—inquire into this whole matter and report by bill or otherwise a remedy for the evil, if one exists. I hope the resolution will go to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, just a moment. As the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has suggested, the method of subscribing for papers by clubs is perhaps the method that has been pursued with reference to the Woman's National Weekly. I have received a number of petitions from the American Woman's League, which is evidently a league made up of a number of clubs formed by women in different parts of the country. They are in my State, I know, of the very highest position in every way, and are engaged in a splendid work of civic improvement and development. Unquestionably the Woman's National Weekly is a newspaper within the meaning of the law, and is not simply an advertising scheme, or, as it has been designated, an advertising sheet.

The point raised with reference to its circulation is the point which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has so strenuously insisted is without merit; and that is that the subscriptions are paid for by the various clubs and sent in in that way to the newspaper. I myself think the resolution does not get to the root of the difficulty, it does not solve any question, but it will bring forth the ruling of the department, and when that ruling is before the Senate it can then be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for them to determine what amendment to the law, if any, is required to meet a situation of this kind. I am in favor of adopting the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, on which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] has demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it seems to me the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] for the information——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. After hearing the remarks of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], I am inclined to think that his is the best suggestion that has been made covering this proposition; that is, for the report of the Postmaster General to come in, and then to refer that report to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for such action as they may deem proper.

Mr. DAVIS. That suits me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am perfectly willing that it shall take that course.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment? I did not exactly understand the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The suggestion was that of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that the resolution be adopted, let the Postmaster General reply to it, and when his report is received, if the Senate shall so desire, it may refer that report to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for such action as they deem necessary. I think that is perhaps the wiser course.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma further yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. I desire once again to ask whether there is anything more contemplated in the resolution, as originally introduced, than information why certain subscriptions are denied the second-class privilege?

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator from Ohio direct his question to me?

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Arkansas, I presume, is best informed in the matter.

Mr. OWEN. I should be glad to have the Senator from Arkansas reply to that question.

Mr. DAVIS. The only object I had in offering the resolution, Mr. President, was to get the information. Then if the information furnishes the basis for further action I shall undertake to carry out what seems proper after the information is at hand. Now, just on that line, if the Senator from Oklahoma will pardon me, I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that the resolution be passed and the information be furnished, and then refer the whole matter to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. It seems to me that that will expedite matters and end the discussion.

Mr. BURTON. That would require a further proceeding possibly; but, Mr. President, in view of that assurance, I withdraw the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the more recent action of the various Senators makes unnecessary the remarks I had proposed to make. I rose merely to emphasize the point made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and to insist upon the information being obtained, which would automatically go, when furnished, to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for their action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, if I had anticipated the long and interesting debate which has just taken place on the matter of newspaper circulation and postage, I should not have given notice of an intention to submit remarks to-day on a subject involving many phases of representative government.

The intelligent observer must have discovered during the past 25 years a constant and general increase, not in the functions of government, but in the subdivisions and consequent division of authority among those who discharge those functions. I refer to the government of the States as well as to the government of the Nation. In every State there are samples of duplicated power. For instance, where a county contains a large city there is maintained both a county and a city government. In the Nation lately the country had an example of an effort upon the part of the President of the United States to discover whether he or the head of the Bureau of Forestry was running the country. Strangely enough a considerable number of American people joined in the controversy and helped the subordinate to the belief that he was running the country.

I believe that government is best which is most simple and direct and thus easily comprehended. The tendency in the business world has been for many years toward concentration, but in our political affairs we may be following the example of the Chinese Empire, where every educated man is supposed to be in the employ of the Government. When he comes out of school, if there is no office for him to hold, they assign him to watching another Chinaman who already holds an office. In other words, they put the young Chinamen to watching the old Chinamen. The division and diversification of authority has resulted in the "bluebooks" of the majority of the States being burdened with the names of boards of review, committees, and commissions almost without number. It is a peculiarity of American government for those charged with authority to delegate a part of it to somebody else. This results in great confusion and in no practical help to the people.

Some years ago there came to the western country a distinguished railroad manager from Pennsylvania. He thought he could teach the western railroad managers how to run railroads. His road in the East had been hauling hard coal. The cars could be switched and jammed around the sidetracks without much danger of damage. He thought the hog and cattle trains could be treated in the same way. He boasted that he was going to take as many as 40 cars of live stock in one train. While congregating his trains the animals would lie down. When he started his trains those that happened to be standing up were thrown onto those that were lying down. He found out, also, when he started his trains there was considerable slack at the couplings. This was so much that the last car in the train had a lurch of about 3½ feet, which was not very healthy for cattle. He soon discovered that his idea of hauling big trains of cattle and hogs was a mistake. He had to return to the simplicity of the methods which had preceded him. Our American system of government has spread out to such an extent that, in my judgment, it is time to begin to take up the slack. Our railroad man is not thus moving live stock to-day. He has learned better methods. The American system of government is rapidly reaching a condition where it is well enough to consider better business methods.

In every county in the Middle West you will find governmental functions multiplied. I presume the same is true elsewhere. In a county which also supports a city there are township clerks and clerks of independent school districts; township treasurers and treasurers of independent school districts. Then, besides all this, there are township trustees and road supervisors. Above all these in a county there are boards of supervisors, and if a city is included in the county, there will be found a mayor, a city council, and all the officers incident to a city government. All this machinery is cumbersome, and though the officeholders draw small salaries, in the aggregate they consume large parts of the taxpayers' money. An effort to abolish any of these offices is like taking one's life in one's hand. Thus a government to insure the protection of life and property and which ought to be an incident of citizenship becomes one of the objects of existence. As a consequence, we can almost say that we have a professional officeholding class. Young men are urged to hold offices. They are told to adopt a "career," and by career is meant a life of office-holding. The real career ought to be in one of the great professions or in manufacturing or farming. Victories won in any of these fields can not be taken away by a primary election.

The government nearest to the people ought to be the city or village government, and being nearest the people ought to be the nearest perfect. But this is not a fact. The usual city or municipal government is the one for which all men now apologize.

It seems that our forefathers were so afraid that our Republic would be converted into a monarchy that they thought it necessary that every municipal government should imitate a republic in its form. Therefore every municipal government has been endowed with legislative authority. It is true it is limited, but notwithstanding that limitation every municipal government has been operated as if its main function were that of making laws. For this purpose every city building has what they call a city hall. In this city hall the legislative body meets, and the gentlemen from the various wards are there. The mayor presides, and all the formalities of a deliberative body are observed. The gentleman from the third ward addresses the presiding officer and the gallery, having in mind his intelligent constituents, as he frequently remarks, and also having in mind his own reelection. The alderman has been called a "false-alarm statesman," but he deceives a great many people. He is doubtless at his best when speaking in opposition to the abolition of any office. He regards such a move as one toward curbing the liberties of the people. His admiring constituents and his admiring contractors are prepared to applaud his utterances. In some States cities have been known to have two branches of a legislative body, an upper and a lower house. Yet their authority is so limited that they can neither add to nor subtract from the penalty of any offense against the laws. They can order sewers and sidewalks and designate what months within which dogs shall be muzzled. They can also prohibit chickens from running at large. The legislatures of States make the important laws, and practically every function discharged by a city council is executive rather than legislative. The claims are allowed by a committee on claims. The report is generally adopted without reading. The men who believe in committees on claims and who are willing to adopt the report of the same are radically opposed to reducing the number of members of the council, and they are especially opposed to the abolition of ward lines.

It happens in many cities that men who represent wards practically represent contractors. Having members of a city government from subdivisions of any nature is a mistake. Men are elected from wards who never could be elected from the city at large. Bad men are elected from bad wards and good men are elected from good wards. But the good men oftentimes receive as much criticism and as much blame for a bad city government as do those who are really responsible. Thus good men are deterred from becoming members of the city council because the general citizenship has been in the habit of dismissing all city councils as being inefficient, neglectful, if not actually corrupt. People have been deterred from undertaking to reform city governments because they regard the task as too large ever to be successfully performed.

The principal error in municipal government of the old style has been in connecting politics with it. The average American connects politics with every form of government. But this has been especially true with municipal government. In many cities candidates for the municipal offices are nominated by political parties, which ought never to be the case. It ought not to matter what a man believes in regard to tariff or reciprocity. He may be as badly mistaken as the most radical insurgent, yet he might make a good member of a city government. Clays and Websters are not demanded to look after letting sewer contracts or putting down pavement. Municipal governments need men who know how to transact business in a businesslike way. Municipal governments do not need theorists nor dreamers. Men are wanted who know when contractors are properly doing their work.

I am trying to illustrate the follies and foolishness of city governments in America. Until recently no thought of actual business has ever entered the head of the men in cities. They have always had bad government, and they are used to it. They have always submitted to graft and are accustomed to it. A man in Arkansas told me the best story illustrating how men become used to graft. It is related that an employee of a grain elevator discovered a knot hole in the lower part of a bin. He stopped up the hole with a cob, and when night came he went by stealth to the elevator and filled bags with the grain which trickled out through the knot hole. He then restored the cob. Every night of his life for 25 years he stole a wagonload of grain from his employer, and when he died he undertook to leave that knot hole to his heirs by his will as part of his estate. This illustrates the acceptance of the situation and the legitimacy of graft.

In the old form of municipal government, where the responsibilities are so divided, it is impossible to find out who is to blame when anything goes wrong. To have a good government, those who do right should be praised and those who do wrong should be criticized. But the public has formed the habit of criticizing everybody and praising nobody. The public formed this plan because there has been vastly more for the critic than for the eulogist.

The public is scarcely informed as to the never-ending division of authority under the old plan of city government, with boards of public works, cemetery boards, library boards, fire and police boards, boards of review, boards of inspection, boards of public parks, boards having charge of the waterworks, and so forth. No man has yet made a list of the boards having to do with the old form of city government. Some months ago I was in a city in Michigan and having occasion to refer to the telephone directory I discovered four pages of the telephone book made up of those who had telephones for the use of the city. Every man had some authority or else he would not have had a telephone at the expense of the city. Such an array of official dignity and authority could not be found on this continent. If every man in that Michigan town having municipal authority should go to the world's fair on the same particular day, there would not be men enough left at home in that town to milk the cows, provided they have not reached that stage of intelligence where they let the women do the work. This is cited as a sample of the overgrown municipal system prevailing in most cities. This distribution of authority is not the result of one year, but of a century's growth. It has resulted in inefficiency and, in most cases, inaction. The same system has been provoking to the taxpayer, who has never been able to find out or locate the blame when anything has gone wrong.

If any man in any modern city undertook to find out who was to blame about any minor happening in his local government, he would be old enough to be a Revolutionary pensioner before he discovered and located the blame.

In one western city it is related that at the time of high water a man whose home was on low ground had his cellar flooded with water. He resorted to the city government for relief. He called on the mayor, who was polite, but could not help him. He made the rounds of all the boards and commissions and finally came back to the board of public works and complained that he could get no relief. Having on a former visit related that the high water had drowned his chickens, a waggish member of the board of public works told him to go back home and go to raising ducks instead of chickens.

In many cities political machines have been formed and have been so strong that their destruction has seemed impossible. The municipal machine has been the "mother" in the municipal vinegar

The American people have been eager to correct political ills far away, but have been neglecting the ills immediately around them.

In the year 1907 we adopted in the city of Des Moines, where I live, a simplified form of city government. It consists of five trustees, or commissioners, elected by the entire city at one election, each for a two-year term and without any ward lines. This has been called the Des Moines plan of city government. The idea originated at Galveston, Tex. The people of Galveston, in their distress after their great calamity, had to have a simplified form of city government. Their affairs were too complicated for the old form. It is a strange fact that a few men can do successfully what a large number of men are unable to do. For instance, we often discover that a receiver appointed by the courts can make a business successful, the very business that a large number of stockholders had failed in. The Des Moines plan, while evolved from Galveston, is greatly improved and seems to us quite complete. The five commissioners have power to elect all the other city officers. They select the auditor, clerk, treasurer, city solicitor, police judge, and so forth. The people hold these five men responsible for the city government,

They do not go to their subordinates when things go wrong, they go to the commissioners direct, or the commissioner. The idea in the Des Moines plan has been concentration of power and concentration of responsibility. We are building a city building which shall not have a legislative chamber in it. We have abolished party politics. We have, as near as may be, established a business government. The people are backing the commissioners in every good thing. Publicity is a main factor. Notice must be given before any ordinance is passed, but we have but few ordinances. We have cleaner streets, better pavements, and in all respects we have a better governed city. A great move is made forward when partisan politics is abolished. The commissioners are chosen at a nonpartisan primary. The 10 receiving the highest number of votes are voted for at the polls. Five of these are elected. One of the number is called mayor. However, he has no more authority than his associates. Each commissioner is the head of a department by mutual agreement. The commissioners give their whole time to work and are on duty during business hours. We have the initiative, the referendum, and recall for the commissioners, but not for any of their subordinates. None of these features of the charter have been used. I would not favor the recall in an organization so large as a State. I have never observed the workings of the initiative and referendum in a State. I am much opposed to the recall when applied to the judiciary. Such a restriction would embarrass an honest judge and do no particular good with one who did not desire to do right. All candidates for commissioner must publish an account of their campaign expenditures, and there can be no promises made for offices to be distributed.

In regard to the recall as applied to the judiciary, I would like to ask what would become of the former decisions of such a discredited judge?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Do you have municipal judges who could be recalled?

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir. These five men who compose the board of commissioners are selected by the people, and they select the judge. The recall applies only to those who are elected.

Mr. HEYBURN. You elect judges in your municipality?

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir; not in the city. Every official, every judge, attorney, auditor, treasurer are appointed by the commission.

Mr. HEYBURN. And they can be recalled?

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. You could recall the power that created them, but you could not recall the creature created?

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly, we could recall the commission. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall insert the Des Moines charter, under which our municipality operates.

Mr. President, I am a mechanic. In years gone by the upper part of every building used for manufacturing was filled with shafting and belting. These were for the distribution of power. The engineer and fireman worked longer hours than anybody else to take care of this belting and shafting. It took 40 per cent of all the fuel to run the idle shafting and belting without turning a single machine. All the shafting had to run or none of it. Now every modern factory runs its machines with separately connected power, and when one machine only is running expenses are cut down accordingly. Why should not the improvements in the political world be kept apace with the improvements in the mechanical world? The useless offices represent the pulleys and shafting of the political machines. Forty per cent of the public money is spent in maintaining this useless expense. Why not reduce it? This is the purpose of the Des Moines plan.

There is not a great railway enterprise in America that could operate for one year if it were conducted with as little system and with as many independent heads as characterize the average city government of the old plan, with ward aldermen and all the old machinery.

It is pleasant to know that American people are giving some attention to reforms in municipal governments. It is satisfying to know that nearly 100 American cities have adopted the commission form of government. This form of government puts the control closely into the hands of the people.

Some men who have considered this subject have suggested that the commissioners ought not to be elected or retired at the same time. But, upon second thought, this will be found to be a virtue. When the people of a given city are all awakened at one time, they can make a revolution at one election. Revolutions in municipal affairs in many cities have never been attempted because of their seeming impossibility. Hunters in the West years ago delighted to have prairie chickens sit in a row on the top rail of a fence so that the hunter could kill a number of them with one shot. This commission form of government, with two-year terms, figuratively speaking, puts the five commissioners on the top rail of the municipal fence to be swept off at one ballot by the voter. When people find that it is possible to produce a change in the entire city government at one election, they will take hope and attempt to act.

Great men are not required to manage the affairs of a city. They need not be familiar with Greek and Roman history. They may not be able to name many of the constellations. But they ought to be able to take care of small details. They ought to keep a city clean. They ought to see that sidewalks and pavements are in repair. These things we have accomplished in Des Moines. We have not attempted to reduce taxation because that is hard to do in a growing city. But we do say we have the best government we have had in 50 years. Des Moines has been under the commission system about 3 years, and there has not been a voice raised in favor of going back to the old system. There is no complaint that the city government has been taken out of the hands of the people. I think the old form of city government is as far behind the times as the ox cart is behind the automobile.

I am in favor of simplifying the forms of government in the State, in the Nation, in the municipality. I am in favor of making governmental matters so plain that there can be no mistake made. The present or the old style city government is as much out of date to-day and as far behind the demands of the present as the ox cart is behind the automobile.

Every State and every community should have well-restricted primary election laws, where the partisans shall determine separately who their nominees shall be. Political platforms ought to be so clear that there could be no misunderstandings of them, and parties should adhere to their platforms. Every public office should be properly filled. Every man in city, State, or municipal employment should earn his salary. Integrity should be demanded in all the small as well as in the large places. In the larger States state-wide primaries for nominations of all offices are impractical. I would advocate nominating a governor, lieutenant governor, and candidate for United States Senator by direct vote of partisans at state-wide primaries. I am in favor of all other nominations being made by State conventions. I am in favor of delegates being elected to State conventions by partisan voters at county primaries, they being obliged to announce themselves as candidates, the delegates to be chosen to the State conventions by partisan votes direct, without the intervention of county conventions. All district nominations should be made by direct partisan principles. I am in favor of electing United States Senators as Representatives in Congress are now elected. I am in favor of keeping all departments of the Government as free from complications as possible. I think the time will come when it will be necessary for every man who holds a public office to tell the truth about his own government and about other men as well as himself. I am in favor of every rational reform which can help in the upbuilding of a great country. I need not say what I have said many times before, that I am in favor of looking after the welfare of the American people before giving particular attention to the welfare of any other people.

In the interest of honesty in public life, in the interest of general political integrity, we all owe it to ourselves not to complicate the Government further, but to simplify it. Not to make it so complex that no one can understand it, but to make it so plain that all can understand it.

APPENDIX.

THE DES MOINES PLAN OF CITY GOVERNMENT.

[Passed by the Thirty-second General Assembly of Iowa and amendments passed by the thirty-third general assembly. Adopted by the city of Des Moines, Iowa, at a special election held June 20, 1907. The election of the first council (commissioners) provided for in the act took place in March, 1908. The "plan" became operative April 1, 1908.]

An act to provide for the government of certain cities, and the adoption thereof by special election "additional to Title V of the code."

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa:

SECTION 1. That any city of the first class, or with special charter, now or hereafter having a population of 25,000 or over, as shown by the last preceding State census, may become organized as a city under the provisions of this act by proceeding as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. Upon petition of electors equal in number to 25 per cent of the votes cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding city election of any such city, the mayor shall, by a proclamation, submit the question of organizing as a city under this act at a special election to be held at a time specified therein and within two months after said petition is filed. If said plan is not adopted at the special election called, the question of adopting said plan shall not be resubmitted to the voters of said city for adoption within two years thereafter, and then the question to adopt shall be resubmitted upon the presentation of a petition signed by electors equal in number to 25 per cent of the votes cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding general city election.

At such election the proposition to be submitted shall be, "Shall the proposition to organize the city of (name of a city), under chapter (naming the chapter containing this act) of the acts of the thirty-second general assembly be adopted?" and the election thereupon shall be conducted, the vote canvassed, and the result declared in the same manner as provided by law in respect to other city elections. If the majority of the votes cast shall be in favor thereof, the city shall thereupon proceed to the election of a new mayor and four councilmen, as hereinafter provided. Immediately after such proposition is adopted, the mayor shall transmit to the governor, to the secretary of state, and to the county auditor each a certificate stating that such proposition was adopted.

At the regular city election after the adoption of such proposition there shall be elected a mayor and four councilmen. In the event, however, that the next regular city election does not occur within one year after such special election, the mayor shall, within 10 days after such special election, by proclamation, call a special election for the election of mayor and four councilmen, 60 days' notice thereof being given in such call, such election in either case to be conducted as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. All laws governing cities of the first class and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act and sections 955, 956, 959, 964, 989, 1000, 1023, and 1053 of the code now applicable to special-charter cities and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall apply to and govern cities organized under this act. All by-laws, ordinances, and resolutions lawfully passed and in force in any such city under its former organization shall remain in force until altered or repealed by the council elected under the provisions of this act. The territorial limits of such city shall remain the same as under its former organization, and all rights and property of every description which were vested in any city under its former organization shall vest in the same under the organization herein contemplated, and no right or liability, either in favor of or against it, existing at the time, and no suit or prosecution of any kind shall be affected by such change unless otherwise provided for in this act.

SEC. 4. In every such city there shall be elected at the regular biennial municipal election a mayor and four councilmen.

If any vacancy occurs in any such office, the remaining members of said council shall appoint a person to fill such vacancy during the balance of the unexpired term.

Said officers shall be nominated and elected at large. Said officers shall qualify and their terms of office shall begin on the first Monday after their election. The terms of office of the mayor and councilmen or aldermen in such city in office at the beginning of the terms of office of the mayor and councilmen first elected under the provisions of this act shall then cease and determine, and the terms of office of all other appointive officers in force in such city, except as hereinafter provided, shall cease and determine as soon as the council shall by resolution declare.

SEC. 5. Candidates to be voted for at all general municipal elections at which a mayor and four councilmen are to be elected under the provisions of this act shall be nominated by a primary election, and no other names shall be placed upon the general ballot except those selected in the manner hereinafter prescribed. The primary election for such nomination shall be held on the second Monday preceding the general municipal election. The judges of election appointed for the general municipal election shall be the judges of the primary election, and it shall be held at the same place, so far as possible, and the polls shall be opened and closed at the same hours, with the same clerks as are required for said general municipal election.

Any person desiring to become a candidate for mayor or councilman shall, at least 10 days prior to said primary election, file with the said clerk a statement of such candidacy, in substantially the following form:

STATE OF IOWA, ——— County, ss:

I ——— ———, being first duly sworn, say that I reside at ——— Street, city of ——, county of ——, State of Iowa; that I am a qualified voter therein; that I am a candidate for nomination to the office of (mayor or councilman) to be voted upon at the primary election to be held on the —— Monday of ———, 19—, and I hereby request that my name be printed upon the official primary ballot for nomination by such primary election for such office.

——— ———.

Subscribed and sworn to (or affirmed) before me by ——— ——— on this — day of ———, 19—.

——— ———.

and shall at the same time file therewith the petition of at least 25 qualified voters requesting such candidacy. Each petition shall be verified by one or more persons as to the qualifications and residence, with street number, of each of the persons so signing the said petition, and the said petition shall be in substantially the following form:

PETITION ACCOMPANYING NOMINATING STATEMENT.

The undersigned, duly qualified electors of the city of ——— and residing at the places set opposite our respective names hereto, do hereby request that the name of (name of candidate) be placed on the ballot as a candidate for nomination for (name of office) at the primary election to be held in such city on the —— Monday of ———, 19—. We further state that we know him to be a qualified elector of said city and a man of good moral character and qualified, in our judgment, for the duties of such office.

Names of qualified electors.	Number.	Streets.

Immediately upon the expiration of the time of filing the statements and petitions for candidacies, the said city clerk shall cause to be published for three successive days in all the daily newspapers published in the city, in proper form, the names of the persons as they appear upon the primary ballots, and if there be no daily newspaper, then in two issues of any other newspapers that may be published in said city; and the said clerk shall thereupon cause the primary ballots to be printed, authenticated with a facsimile of his signature. Upon the said ballot the names of the candidates for mayor, arranged alphabetically, shall first be placed, with a square at the left of each name, and immediately below the words "Vote for one." Following these names, likewise arranged in alphabetical order, shall appear the names of the candidates for councilmen, with a square at the left of each name, and immediately below the names of such candidates shall appear the words "Vote for four." The ballots shall be printed upon plain, substantial white paper, and shall be headed:

CANDIDATES FOR NOMINATION FOR MAYOR AND COUNCILMEN OF ——— CITY AT THE PRIMARY ELECTION.

But shall have no party designation or mark whatever. The ballots shall be in substantially the following form:

[Place a cross in the square preceding the names of the parties you favor as candidates for the respective positions.]

OFFICIAL PRIMARY BALLOT.

(Candidate for nomination for mayor and councilmen of ——— city at the primary election.)

For mayor.

☐ (Name of candidate.)
(Vote for one.)

For councilman.

☐ (Name of candidate.)
(Vote for four.)

Official ballot attest:

(Signature.)

———.
City Clerk.

Having caused said ballots to be printed, the said city clerk shall cause to be delivered at each polling place a number of said ballots equal to twice the number of votes cast in such polling precinct at the last general municipal election for mayor. The persons who are qualified to vote at the general municipal election shall be qualified to vote at such primary election, and challenges can be made by not more than two persons, to be appointed at the time of opening the polls by the judges of election; and the law applicable to challenges at a general municipal election shall be applicable to challenges made at such primary election. Judges of election shall, immediately upon the closing of the polls, count the ballots and ascertain the number of votes cast in such precinct for each of the candidates, and make return thereof to the city clerk, upon proper blanks, to be furnished by the said clerk, within six hours of the closing of the polls. On the day following the said primary election the said city clerk shall canvass said returns so received from all the polling precincts, and shall make and publish in all the newspapers of said city, at least once, the result thereof. Said canvass by the city clerk shall be publicly made. The two candidates receiving the highest number of votes for mayor shall be the candidates and the only candidates whose names shall be placed upon the ballot for mayor at the next succeeding general municipal election, and the eight candidates receiving the highest number of votes for councilman, or all such candidates if less than eight, shall be placed upon the ballot for councilman at such municipal election.

All electors of cities under this act who by the laws governing cities of the first class and cities acting under special charter would be entitled to vote for the election of officers at any general municipal election in such cities, shall be qualified to vote at all elections under this act; and the ballot at such general municipal election shall be in the same general form as for such primary election, so far as applicable, and in all elections in such city the election precincts, voting places, method of conducting the election, canvassing the votes, and announcing the results shall be the same as by law provided for election of officers in such cities, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5A. Any person who shall agree to perform any services in the interest of any candidate for any office provided in this act in consideration of any money or other valuable thing for such services performed in the interest of any candidate shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $300 or be imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding 30 days.

SEC. 5B. Any person offering a bribe, either in money or other consideration, to any elector for the purpose of influencing his vote at any election provided in this act, or any elector entitled to vote at any such election receiving and accepting such bribe or other consideration; any person making false answer to any of the provisions of this act relative to his qualifications to vote at said election; any person willfully voting or offering to vote at such election who has not been a resident of this State for six months next preceding said election, or who is not 21 years of age, or is not a citizen of the United States, or knowing himself not to be a qualified elector of such precinct where he offers to vote; any person knowingly procuring, aiding, or abetting any violation hereof shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined a sum not less than $100 nor more than $500, and be imprisoned in the county jail not less than 10 nor more than 90 days.

SEC. 6. Every such city shall be governed by a council, consisting of the mayor and four councilmen, chosen as provided in this act, each of whom shall have the right to vote on all questions coming before the council. Three members of the council shall constitute a quorum, and the affirmative vote of three members shall be necessary to adopt any motion, resolution, or ordinance, or pass any measure, unless a greater number is provided for in this act. Upon every vote the yeas and nays shall be called and recorded, and every motion, resolution, or ordinance shall be reduced to writing and read before the vote is taken thereon. The mayor shall preside at all meetings of the council; he shall have no power to veto any measure, but every resolution or ordinance passed by the council must be signed by the mayor, or by two councilmen, and be recorded before the same shall be in force.

SEC. 7. The council shall have and possess and the council and its members shall exercise all executive, legislative, and judicial powers and duties now had, possessed, and exercised by the mayor, city council, board of public work, park commissioners, board of police and fire commissioners, board of waterworks trustees, board of library trustees, solicitor, assessor, treasurer, auditor, city engineer, and other executive and administrative officers in cities of the first class and cities acting under special charter. The executive and administrative powers, authority, and duties in such cities shall be distributed into and among five departments, as follows:

1. Department of public affairs.
2. Department of accounts and finance.
3. Department of public safety.

4. Department of streets and public improvements.
5. Department of parks and public property.

The council shall determine the powers and duties to be performed by, and assign them to, the appropriate department; shall prescribe the powers and duties of officers and employees; may assign particular officers and employees to one or more of the departments; may require an officer or employee to perform duties in two or more departments; and may make such other rules and regulations as may be necessary or proper for the efficient and economical conduct of the business of the city.

SEC. 8. The mayor shall be superintendent of the department of public affairs, and the council shall, at the first regular meeting after election of its members, designate by majority vote one councilman to be superintendent of the department of accounts and finances, one to be superintendent of the department of public safety, one to be superintendent of the department of streets and public improvements, and one to be superintendent of the department of parks and public property, but such designation shall be changed whenever it appears that the public service would be benefited thereby.

The council shall, at said first meeting, or as soon as practicable thereafter, elect by majority vote the following officers: A city clerk, solicitor, assessor, treasurer, auditor, civil engineer, city physician, marshal, chief of fire department, market master, street commissioner, three library trustees, and such other officers and assistants as shall be provided for by ordinance and necessary to the proper and efficient conduct of the affairs of the city, and shall appoint a police judge in those cities not having a superior court. Any officer or assistant elected or appointed by the council may be removed from office at any time by vote of a majority of the members of the council, except as otherwise provided for in this act.

SEC. 9. The council shall have power from time to time to create, fill, and discontinue offices and employments other than herein prescribed, according to their judgment of the needs of the city; and may by majority vote of all the members remove any such officer or employee, except as otherwise provided for in this act; and may by resolution or otherwise prescribe, limit, or change the compensation of such officers or employees.

SEC. 10. The mayor and council shall have an office at the city hall, and their total compensation shall be as follows: In cities having by the last preceding State or national census from 25,000 to 40,000 people, the annual salary of the mayor shall be $2,500 and of each councilman $1,800. In cities having by such census from 40,000 to 60,000 people, the mayor's annual salary shall be $3,000 and that of each councilman $2,500; and in cities having by such census over 60,000 population, the mayor's annual salary shall be $3,500 and that of each councilman $3,000. Such salaries shall be payable in equal monthly installments.

Any increase in salary occasioned under the provisions of this scale by increase in population in any city shall commence with the month next after the official publication of the census showing such increase therein.

Every other officer or assistant shall receive such salary or compensation as the council shall by ordinance provide, payable in equal monthly installments.

The salary or compensation of all other employees of such city shall be fixed by the council and shall be payable monthly or at such shorter periods as the council shall determine.

SEC. 11. Regular meetings of the council shall be held on the first Monday after the election of councilmen, and thereafter at least once each month. The council shall provide by ordinance for the time of holding regular meetings, and special meetings may be called from time to time by the mayor or two councilmen. All meetings of the council, whether regular or special, at which any person not a city officer is admitted shall be open to the public.

The mayor shall be president of the council and preside at its meetings, and shall supervise all departments and report to the council for its action all matters requiring attention in either. The superintendent of the department of accounts and finances shall be vice president of the council, and in case of vacancy in the office of mayor, or the absence or inability of the mayor, shall perform the duties of the mayor.

SEC. 12. Every ordinance or resolution appropriating money or ordering any street improvement or sewer, or making or authorizing the making of any contract, or granting any franchise or right to occupy or use the streets, highways, bridges, or public places in the city for any purpose, shall be complete in the form in which it is finally passed, and remain on file with the city clerk for public inspection at least one week before the final passage or adoption thereof. No franchise or right to occupy or use the streets, highways, bridges, or public places in any city shall be granted, renewed, or extended, except by ordinance, and every franchise or grant for interurban or street railways, gas, or waterworks, electric light or power plants, heating plants, telegraph or telephone systems, or other public service utilities within said city, must be authorized or approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon at a general or special election, as provided in section 770 of the code.

SEC. 13. No officer or employee elected or appointed in any such city shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract or job for work or materials, or the profits thereof, or services to be furnished or performed for the city; and no such officer or employee shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract or job for work or materials, or the profits thereof, or services to be furnished or performed for any person, firm, or corporation operating interurban railway, street railway, gas works, waterworks, electric light or power plant, heating plant, telegraph line, telephone exchange, or other public utility within the territorial limits of said city. No such officer or employee shall accept or receive, directly or indirectly, from any person, firm, or corporation operating within the territorial limits of said city, any interurban railway, street railway, gas works, waterworks, electric light or power plant, heating plant, telegraph line or telephone exchange, or other business using or operating under a public franchise, any frank, free ticket or free service, or accept or receive, directly or indirectly, from any such person, firm, or corporation, any other service upon terms more favorable than is granted to the public generally. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and every such contract or agreement shall be void.

Such prohibition of free transportation shall not apply to policemen or firemen in uniform; nor shall any free service to city officials heretofore provided by any franchise or ordinance be affected by this section. Any officer or employee of such city who, by solicitation or otherwise, shall exert his influence, directly or indirectly, to influence other officers or employees of such city to adopt his political views or to favor any particular person or candidate for office, or who shall in any manner contribute money, labor, or other valuable thing to any person for election purposes, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding three hundred dollars ($300) or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding thirty (30) days.

SEC. 14. Immediately after organizing the council shall by ordinance appoint three civil service commissioners, who shall hold office, one until the first Monday in April in the second year after his appointment, and one until the first Monday in April of the fourth year after his appointment, and one until the first Monday in April of the sixth year after his appointment. Each succeeding council shall, as soon as practicable after organizing, appoint one commissioner for six years, who shall take the place of the commissioner whose term of office expires. The chairman of the commission for each biennial period shall be the member whose term first expires. No person while on the said commission shall hold or be a candidate for any office of public trust. Two of said members shall constitute a quorum to transact business. The commissioners must be citizens of Iowa, and residents of the city for more than three years next preceding their appointment.

The council may remove any of said commissioners during their term of office for cause, four councilmen voting in favor of such removal, and shall fill any vacancy that may occur in said commission for the unexpired term. The city council shall provide suitable rooms in which the said civil service commission may hold its meetings. They shall have a clerk, who shall keep a record of all its meetings, such city to supply the said commission with all necessary equipment to properly attend to such business.

(a) Before entering upon the duties of their office, each of said commissioners shall take and subscribe an oath, which shall be filed and kept in the office of the city clerk, to support the Constitution of the United States and the State of Iowa, and to obey the laws, and to aim to secure and maintain an honest and efficient force, free from partisan distinction or control, and to perform the duties of his office to the best of his ability.

(b) Said commission shall, on the first Monday of April and October of each year, or oftener if it shall be deemed necessary, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the council, hold examinations for the purpose of determining the qualifications of applicants for positions, which examination shall be practical and shall fairly test the fitness of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the position to which they seek to be appointed. Said commission shall as soon as possible after such examination certify to the council double the number of persons necessary to fill vacancies, who, according to its records, have the highest standing for the position they seek to fill as a result of such examination, and all vacancies which occur, that come under the civil service, prior to the date of the next regular examination, shall be filled from said list so certified: Provided, however, That should the list for any cause be reduced to less than three for any division, then the council or the head of the proper department may temporarily fill a vacancy, but not to exceed 30 days.

(c) All persons subject to such civil-service examinations shall be subject to removal from office or employment by the council for misconduct or failure to perform their duties under such rules and regulations as it may adopt, and the chief of police, chief of the fire department, or any superintendent or foreman in charge of municipal work, may peremptorily suspend or discharge any subordinate then under his direction for neglect of duty or disobedience of his orders, but shall, within 24 hours thereafter, report such suspension or discharge, and the reason therefor, to the superintendent of his department, who shall thereupon affirm or revoke such discharge or suspension, according to the facts.

Such employee (or the officer discharging or suspending him) may, within five days of such ruling, appeal therefrom to the council, which shall fully hear and determine the matter.

(d) The council shall have the power to enforce the attendance of witnesses, the production of books and papers, and power to administer oaths in the same manner and with like effect, and under the same penalties, as in the case of magistrates exercising criminal or civil jurisdiction under the statutes of Iowa.

Said commissioners shall make annual report to the council, and it may require a special report from said commission at any time; and said council may prescribe such rules and regulations for the proper conduct of the business of the said commission as shall be found expedient and advisable, including restrictions on appointment, promotions, removals for cause, roster of employees, certification of records to the auditor, and restrictions on payment to persons improperly employed.

(e) The council of such city shall have power to pass ordinances imposing suitable penalties for the punishment of persons violating any of the provisions of this act relating to the civil service commission.

(f) The provisions of this section shall apply to all appointive officers and employees of such city, except those especially named in section 8 of this act, commissioners of any kind (laborers whose occupation requires no special skill or fitness), election officials, and mayor's secretary and assistant solicitor, where such officers are appointed: Provided, however, That existing employees heretofore appointed or employed after competitive examination, or for long service under the provisions of chapter 31, acts of the Twenty-ninth General Assembly, and subsequent amendments thereto, shall retain their positions without further examination unless removed for cause.

All officers and employees in any such city shall be elected or appointed with reference to their qualifications and fitness, and for the good of the public service, and without reference to their political faith or party affiliations.

It shall be unlawful for any candidate for office, or any officer in any such city, directly or indirectly, to give or promise any person or persons any office, position, employment, benefit, or anything of value, for the purpose of influencing or obtaining the political support, aid, or vote of any person or persons.

Every elective officer in any such city shall, within 30 days after qualifying, file with the city clerk, and publish at least once in a daily newspaper of general circulation, his sworn statement of all his election and campaign expenses, and by whom such funds were contributed.

Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor and be a ground for removal from office.

SEC. 15. The council shall each month print in pamphlet form a detailed itemized statement of all receipts and expenses of the city and a summary of its proceedings during the preceding month, and furnish printed copies thereof to the State library, the city library, the daily newspapers of the city, and to persons who shall apply therefor at the office of the city clerk. At the end of each year the council shall cause a full and complete examination of all the books and accounts of the city to be made by competent accountants, and shall publish the result of such examination in the manner above provided for publication of statements of monthly expenditures.

SEC. 16. If at the beginning of the term of office of the first council elected in such city under the provisions of this act the appropriations for the expenditures of the city government for the current fiscal year have been made, said council shall have power, by ordinance, to revise, to repeal, or change said appropriations and to make additional appropriations.

SEC. 17. In the construction of this act the following rules shall be observed, unless such construction would be inconsistent with the manifest intent, or repugnant to the context of the statute:

1. The words "councilman" or "alderman" shall be construed to mean "councilman" when applied to cities under this act.

2. When an office or officer is named in any law referred to in this act, it shall, when applied to cities under this act, be construed to mean the office or officer having the same functions or duties under the provisions of this act, or under ordinances passed under authority thereof.

3. The word "franchise" shall include every special privilege in the streets, highways, and public places of the city, whether granted by the State or the city, which does not belong to the citizens generally by common right.

4. The word "electors" shall be construed to mean persons qualified to vote for elective offices at regular municipal elections.

SEC. 18. The holder of any elective office may be removed at any time by the electors qualified to vote for a successor of such incumbent. The procedure to effect the removal of an incumbent of an elective office shall be as follows: A petition signed by electors entitled to vote for a successor to the incumbent sought to be removed, equal in number to at least 25 per cent of the entire vote for all candidates for the office of mayor at the last preceding general municipal election, demanding an election of a successor of the person sought to be removed, shall be filed with the city clerk, which petition shall contain a general statement of the grounds for which the removal is sought. The signatures to the petition need not all be appended to one paper, but each signer shall add to his signature his place of residence, giving the street and number. One of the signers of each such paper shall make oath before an officer competent to administer oaths that the statements therein made are true as he believes, and that each signature to the paper appended is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be. Within 10 days from the date of filing such petition the city clerk shall examine and from the voters' register ascertain whether or not said petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, and, if necessary, the council shall allow him extra help for that purpose; and he shall attach to said petition his certificate, showing the result of said examination. If by the clerk's certificate the petition is shown to be insufficient, it may be amended within 10 days from the date of said certificate. The clerk shall, within 10 days after such amendment, make like examination of the amended petition, and if his certificate shall show the same to be insufficient, it shall be returned to the person filing the same; without prejudice, however, to the filing of a new petition to the same effect. If the petition shall be deemed to be sufficient, the clerk shall submit the same to the council without delay. If the petition shall be found to be sufficient, the council shall order and fix a date for holding the said election not less than 30 days or more than 40 days from the date of the clerk's certificate to the council that a sufficient petition is filed.

The council shall make, or cause to be made, publication of notice and all arrangements for holding such election, and the same shall be conducted, returned, and the result thereof declared, in all respects as are other city election. The successor of any officer so removed shall hold office during the unexpired term of his predecessor. Any person sought to be removed may be a candidate to succeed himself, and unless he requests otherwise in writing, the clerk shall place his name on the official ballot without nomination. In any such removal election, the candidate receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. At such election if some other person than the incumbent receives the highest number of votes the incumbent shall thereupon be deemed removed from the office upon qualification of his successor. In case the party who receives the highest number of votes should fail to qualify, within 10 days after receiving notification of election, the office shall be deemed vacant. If the incumbent receives the highest number of votes he shall continue in office. The same method of removal shall be cumulative and additional to the methods heretofore provided by law.

SEC. 19. Any proposed ordinance may be submitted to the council by petition signed by electors of the city equal in number to the percentage hereinafter required. The signatures, verification, authentication, inspection, certification, amendment, and submission of such petition shall be the same as provided for petitions under section 18 hereof.

If the petition accompanying the proposed ordinance be signed by electors equal in number to 25 per cent of the votes cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding general election, and contains a request that the said ordinance be submitted to a vote of the people if not passed by the council, such council shall either—

(a) Pass said ordinance without alteration within 20 days after attachment of the clerk's certificate to the accompanying petition, or

(b) Forthwith after the clerk shall attach to the petition accompanying such ordinance his certificate of sufficiency, the council shall call a special election, unless a general municipal election is fixed within 90 days thereafter, and at such special or general municipal election, if one is so fixed, such ordinance shall be submitted without alteration to the vote of the electors of said city.

But if the petition is signed by not less than 10 nor more than 25 per cent of the electors, as above defined, then the council shall, within 20 days, pass said ordinance without change, or submit the same at the next general city election occurring not more than 30 days after the clerk's certificate of sufficiency is attached to said petition.

The ballots used when voting upon said ordinance shall contain these words: "For the ordinance" (stating the nature of the proposed ordinance) and "Against the ordinance" (stating the nature of the proposed ordinance). If a majority of the qualified electors voting on the proposed ordinance shall vote in favor thereof, such ordinance shall thereupon become a valid and binding ordinance of the city; and any ordinance proposed by petition, or which shall be adopted by a vote of the people, can not be repealed or amended except by a vote of the people.

Any number of proposed ordinances may be voted upon at the same election, in accordance with the provisions of this section; but there shall not be more than one special election in any period of six months for such purpose.

The council may submit a proposition for the repeal of any such ordinance or for amendments thereto, to be voted upon at any succeeding general city election; and should such proposition so submitted receive a majority of the votes cast thereon at such election, such ordinance shall thereby be repealed or amended accordingly. Whenever any ordinance or proposition is required by this act to be submitted to the voters of the city at any election, the city clerk shall cause such ordinance or proposition to be published once in each of the daily newspapers published in said city, such publication to be not more than 20 nor less than 5 days before the submission of such proposition or ordinance to be voted on.

SEC. 20. No ordinance passed by the council, except when otherwise required by the general laws of the State or by the provisions of this act, except an ordinance for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, which contains a statement of its urgency and is passed by a two-thirds vote of the council, shall go into effect before 10 days from the time of its final passage; and if during said 10 days a petition signed by electors of the city equal in number to at least 25 per cent of the entire vote cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding general municipal election at which a mayor was elected, protesting against the passage of such ordinance, be presented to the council, the same shall thereupon be suspended from going into operation, and it shall be the duty of the council to reconsider such ordinance; and if the same is not entirely repealed, the council shall submit the ordinance, as is provided by subsection (b) of section 19 of this act, to the vote of the electors of the city, either at the general election or at a special municipal election to be called for that purpose; and such ordinance shall not go into effect or become operative unless a majority of the qualified electors voting on the same shall vote in favor thereof. Said petition shall be in all respects in accordance with the provisions of said section 19, except as to the percentage of signers, and be examined and certified to by the clerk in all respects as therein provided.

SEC. 21. Any city which shall have operated for more than six years under the provisions of this act may abandon such organization hereunder and accept the provisions of the general law of the State then applicable to cities of its population, or if now organized under special charter, may resume said special charter by proceeding as follows:

Upon the petition of not less than 25 per cent of the electors of such city a special election shall be called, at which the following proposition only shall be submitted: "Shall the city of (name the city) abandon its organization under chapter — of the acts of the thirty-second general assembly and become a city under the general law governing cities of like population, or if now organized under special charter, shall resume said special charter?"

If a majority of the votes cast at such special election be in favor of such proposition, the officers elected at the next succeeding biennial election shall be those then prescribed by the general law of the State for cities of like population, and upon the qualification of such officers such city shall become a city under such general law of the State; but such change shall not in any manner or degree affect the property, right, or liabilities of any nature of such city, but shall merely extend to such change in its form of government.

The sufficiency of such petition shall be determined, the election ordered and conducted, and the results declared, generally as provided by section 18 of this act, in so far as the provisions thereof are applicable.

SEC. 22. Petitions provided for in this act shall be signed by none but legal voters of the city. Each petition shall contain, in addition to the names of the petitioners, the street and house number in which the petitioner resides, his age, and length of residence in the city. It shall also be accompanied by the affidavit of one or more legal voters of the city stating that the signers thereof were, at the time of signing, legal voters of said city, and the number of signers at the time the affidavit was made.

SEC. 23. This act, being deemed of immediate importance, shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Register and Leader and Des Moines Capital, newspapers published in Des Moines, Iowa.

Approved March 29, A. D. 1907.

AMENDMENT TO RECALL CLAUSE.

Chapter 65. Recalling of elective officers in certain cities. H. F. 508.

An act to amend the law as it appears in section 1056a 36 of the supplement to the code, 1907, relating to the government of certain cities and the recalling of elective officers therein.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa:

SECTION 1. Statement of candidacy—petition—ballot—form. That section 1056a 36 of the supplement to the code, 1907, be amended by inserting, after the word "elections" at the end of the thirty-fourth line in said section, the following:

"So far as applicable, except as otherwise herein provided, nominations hereunder shall be made without the intervention of a primary election by filing with the clerk, at least 10 days prior to said election, a statement of candidacy accompanied by a petition signed by electors entitled to vote at said special election equal in number to at least 10 per cent of the entire vote for all candidates for the office of mayor at the last preceding general municipal election, which said statement of candidacy and petition shall be substantially in the form set out in section 1056a 21 of the supplement to the code, 1907, so far as the same is applicable, substituting the word 'special' for the word 'primary' in such statement and petition, and stating therein that such person is a candidate for election instead of nomination."

The ballot for such special election shall be in substantially the following form:

OFFICIAL BALLOT.

Special election for the balance of the unexpired term of ——— ——— as ———.

For ———.

☐ (Names of candidates.)

(Vote for one only.)

———

Name of present incumbent.

Official ballot attest:

City Clerk.

SEC. 2. In effect. This act being deemed of immediate importance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval and publication in the Des Moines Register and Leader and Des Moines Capital, newspapers published in Des Moines, Iowa.

CHAPTER 64.

Government of certain cities. H. F. 2.

An act to repeal sections 1056a 17, 1056a 18, 1056a 21, and 1056a 26 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, and to enact substitutes therefor, and to amend sections 1056a 19, 1056a 20, 1056a 24, 1056a 25, 1056a 28, 1056a 32, and 1056a 39 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, all relating to the government of certain cities.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa:

SECTION 1. Repeal—cities affected. That section 1056a 17 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and the following enacted in lieu thereof:

"Cities having by the last preceding State or national census a population of 7,000 or over, including any such city acting under special charter, may become organized as a city under the provisions of this act by proceeding as hereinafter provided."

SEC. 2. Repeal—petition—question submitted—result certified—election of officers. That section 1056a 18 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, repealed and the following enacted in lieu thereof:

"Upon petition of electors equal in number to 25 per cent of the votes cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding city election of any such city, the mayor shall, by proclamation, submit the question of organizing as a city under this act at a special election to be held at a time specified therein, and within two months after said petition is filed: Provided, however, That in case any city is located in two or more townships said petition shall be signed by 25 per cent of the qualified electors of said city residing in each of said townships. If said plan is not adopted at the special election called, the question of adopting said plan shall not be resubmitted to the voters of said city for adoption within two years thereafter, and then the question to adopt shall be resubmitted upon the presentation of a petition signed by electors as hereinbefore provided, equal in number to 25 per cent of the votes cast for all candidates for mayor at the last preceding general city election. At such election the proposition to be submitted shall be: 'Shall the proposition to organize the city of (name the city) under chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, as amended by the acts of the thirty-third general assembly, be adopted?' and the election thereupon shall be conducted, the vote canvassed, and the result declared in the same manner as provided by law in respect to other city elections. If the majority of the votes cast shall be in favor thereof, cities having a population of 25,000 and over shall thereupon proceed to the election of a mayor and four councilmen, and cities having a population of 7,000, and less than 25,000, shall proceed to the election of a mayor and two councilmen, as hereinafter provided. Immediately after such proposition is adopted, the mayor shall transmit to the governor, to the secretary of state, and to the county auditor each a certificate stating that such proposition was adopted. At the next regular city election, after the adoption of such proposition, there shall be elected a mayor and councilmen. In the event, however, that the next regular city election does not occur within one year after such special election the mayor shall within 10 days after such special election, by proclamation, call a special election for the election of a mayor and councilmen, 60 days' notice thereof being given in such call; such election in either case to be conducted as hereinafter provided."

SEC. 3. Statutes relating to cities of second class applicable. That section 1056a 19 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the word "first" and before the word "class" in the first line thereof the words "and second."

SEC. 4. Elective officers. That section 1056a 20 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the first sentence of said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"In every city having a population of 25,000 and over there shall be elected at the regular biennial municipal election a mayor and four councilmen, and in every city having a population of 7,000 and less than 25,000, there shall be elected at such election a mayor and two councilmen."

SEC. 5. Repeal—candidates—how nominated—primary election—ballot—canvass of vote—result published—municipal election. That section 1056a 21 of the supplement to the code, 1907, be repealed and the following enacted in lieu thereof:

"Candidates to be voted for at all general municipal elections at which a mayor and councilmen are to be elected under the provisions of this act shall be nominated by a primary election, and no other names shall be placed upon the general ballot except those selected in the manner hereinafter prescribed. The primary election for such nomination shall be held on the second Monday preceding the general municipal election. The judges of election appointed for the general municipal election shall be the judges of the primary election, and it shall be held at the same place, so far as possible, and the polls shall be opened and closed at the same hours, with the same clerks as are required for said general municipal election. Any person desiring to become a candidate for mayor or councilman shall, at least 10 days prior to said primary election, file with the said clerk a statement of such candidacy, in substantially the following form:

STATE OF IOWA, ——— County, ss:

I (——— ———), being first duly sworn, say that I reside at — Street, city of ———, county of ———, State of Iowa; that I am a qualified voter therein; that I am a candidate for nomination to the office of (mayor or councilman) to be voted upon at the primary election to be held on the ——— Monday of ———, 19—, and I hereby request that my name be printed upon the official primary ballot for nomination by such primary election for such office.

——— ———

Subscribed and sworn to (or affirmed) before me by ——— ——— on this ——— day of ———, 19—.

——— ———

and shall at the same time file therewith the petition of at least 25 qualified voters requesting such candidacy. Each petition shall be verified by one or more persons as to the qualifications and residence, with street number, of each of the persons so signing the said petition, and the said petition shall be in substantially the following form:

PETITION ACCOMPANYING NOMINATING STATEMENT.

The undersigned, duly qualified electors of the city of ——— and residing at the places set opposite our respective names hereto, do hereby request that the name of (name of candidate) be placed on the ballot as a candidate for nomination for (name of office) at the primary election to be held in such city on the — Monday of ———, 19—. We further state that we know him to be a qualified elector of said city and a man of good moral character and qualified, in our judgment, for the duties of such office.

Names of qualified electors.	Number.	Street.

Immediately upon the expiration of the time of filing the statements and petitions for candidacies, the said city clerk shall cause to be published for three successive days in all the daily newspapers published in the city, in proper form, the names of the persons as they are to appear upon the primary ballot, and if there be no daily newspaper, then in two issues of any other newspapers that may be published in said city; and the said clerk shall thereupon cause the primary ballots to be printed, authenticated with a facsimile of his signature. Upon the said ballot the names of the candidates for mayor, arranged alphabetically, shall first be placed, with a square at the left of each name and immediately below the words "Vote for one." Following these names, likewise arranged in alphabetical order, shall appear the names of the candidates for councilmen, with a square at the left of each name, and below the names of such candidates shall appear the words "Vote for four" or "Vote for two," as the case may be. The ballot shall be printed upon plain, substantial, white paper and shall be headed:

CANDIDATES FOR NOMINATION FOR MAYOR AND COUNCILMEN OF ——— CITY AT THE PRIMARY ELECTION.

But shall have no party designation or mark whatever. The ballots shall be in substantially the following form:

[Place a cross in the square preceding the names of the parties you favor as candidates for the respective positions.]

OFFICIAL PRIMARY BALLOT.

(Candidates for nomination for mayor and councilmen of ——— city at the primary election.)

For mayor.

☐ (Name of candidate.)

(Vote for one.)

For councilman.

☐ (Name of candidate.)

(Vote for four) or (Vote for two) as the case may be.

Official ballot attest:

(Signature)

——— ———

City Clerk.

Having caused said ballots to be printed, the said city clerk shall cause to be delivered at each polling place a number of said ballots equal to twice the number of votes cast in such polling precinct at the last general municipal election for mayor. The persons who are qualified to vote at the general municipal election shall be qualified to vote at such primary election, and challenges can be made by not more than two persons, to be appointed at the time of opening the polls by the judges of election; and the law applicable to challenges at a general municipal election shall be applicable to challenges made at such primary election. Judges of election shall, immediately upon the closing of the polls, count the ballots and ascertain the number of votes cast in such precinct for each of the candidates, and make return thereof to the city clerk, upon proper blanks to be furnished by the said clerk, within six hours of the closing of the polls. On the day following the said primary election the said city clerk shall canvass said returns so received from all the polling precincts, and shall make and publish in all the newspapers of said city, at least once, the result thereof. Said canvass by the city clerk shall be publicly made. The 2 candidates receiving the highest number of votes for mayor shall be the candidates, and the only candidates, whose names shall be placed upon the ballot for mayor at the next succeeding general municipal election, and in cities having a population of 25,000 and over, the 8 candidates receiving the highest number of votes for councilman, or all such candidates if less than 8, and in cities having a population of 7,000 and less than 25,000, the 4 candidates receiving the highest number of votes for councilman, or all such candidates if less than 4, shall be the candidates, and the only candidates whose names shall be placed upon the ballot for councilman at such municipal election. All electors of cities under this act who by the laws governing cities of the first and second class and cities acting under special charter would be entitled to vote for the election of officers at any general municipal election in such cities, shall be qualified to vote at all elections under this act; and the ballot at such general municipal election shall be in the same general form as for such primary election, so far as applicable, and in all elections in such city the election precinct, voting places, method of conducting election, canvassing the vote, and announcing the results, shall be the same as by law provided for election of officers in such cities, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act."

SEC. 6. Council—quorum: That section 1056a 24 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of said section beginning with the word "every," in the first line thereof, down to and including the word "act," in the seventh line of said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Every city having a population of 25,000 and over shall be governed by a council consisting of the mayor and 4 councilmen, and every city having a population of 7,000 and less than 25,000 shall be governed by a council consisting of the mayor and 2 councilmen, chosen as provided in this act, each of whom shall have the right to vote on all questions coming before the council. In cities having 4 councilmen 3 members of the council shall constitute a quorum, and in cities having 2 councilmen, 2 members of the council shall constitute a quorum, and in cities having 4 councilmen the affirmative vote of 3 members, and in cities having 2 councilmen the affirmative vote of 2 members shall be necessary to adopt any motion, resolution, or ordinance, or pass any measure unless a greater number is provided for in this act."

SEC. 7. Council—powers and duties: That section 1056a 25 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of said section, beginning with the word "The," in the first line thereof, and closing with the word "charter," in the eighth line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The council shall have and possess, and the council and its members shall exercise all executive, legislative, and judicial powers and duties now had, possessed, and exercised by the mayor, city council, solicitor, assessor, treasurer, auditor, city engineer, and other executive and administrative officers in cities of the first and second class, and in cities under special charter, and shall also possess and exercise all executive, legislative, and judicial powers and duties now had and exercised by the board of public works, park commissioners, the board of police and fire commissioners, board of waterworks trustees, and board of library trustees in all cities wherein a board of public works, park commissioners, board of police and fire commissioners, board of waterworks trustees, and board of library trustees now exist or may be hereafter created."

SEC. 8. Repeal—department superintendents—officers and assistants: That section 1056a 26 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the following enacted in lieu thereof:

"The mayor shall be superintendent of the department of public affairs, and the council shall at the first regular meeting after election of its members designate by majority vote one councilman to be superintendent of the department of accounts and finances; one to be superintendent of the department of public safety; one to be superintendent of the department of street and public improvements; and one to be superintendent of the department of parks and public property: Provided, however, That in cities having a population of less than 25,000 there shall be designated to each councilman two of said departments. Such designation shall be changed whenever it appears that the public service would be benefited thereby. The council shall, at said first meeting, or as soon as practicable thereafter, elect by majority vote the following officers: A city clerk, solicitor, assessor, treasurer, auditor, civil engineer, city physician, marshal, chief of fire department, market master, street commissioner, three library trustees, and such other officers and assistants as shall be provided for by ordinance and necessary to the proper and efficient conduct of the affairs of the city: Provided, however, That in cities having a population of less than 25,000 such only of the above-named officers shall be appointed as may, in the judgment of the mayor and councilmen be necessary for the proper and efficient transaction of the affairs of the city. In those cities of the first class not having a superior court, the council shall appoint a police judge. In cities of the second class not having a superior court the mayor shall hold police court, as now provided by law. Any officer or assistant elected or appointed by the council may be removed from office at any time by vote of a majority of the members of the council, except as otherwise provided for in this act."

SEC. 9. Office in city hall—salaries: That section 1056a 28 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of said section beginning with the word "The," in the first line thereof, and ending with the figures and dollar mark "$3,000" in the third line from the top of page 214 as the same appears in the supplement to the code, 1907, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The mayor and councilmen shall have an office at the city hall, and their total compensation shall be as follows: In cities having by the last preceding State or national census a population of 7,000 and less than 10,000 the mayor's annual salary shall be $600 and each councilman $450. In cities having by such census a population of 10,000 and less than 15,000 the mayor's annual salary shall be $1,200 and each councilman $900. In cities having by such census a population of 15,000 and less than 25,000 the mayor's annual salary shall be $1,500 and each councilman $1,200. In cities having by such census a population of 25,000 and less than 40,000 the mayor's annual salary shall be $2,500 and each councilman $1,800. In cities having by such census a population of 40,000 and less than 60,000 the mayor's annual salary shall be $3,000 and each councilman $2,500; and in cities having by such census a population of 60,000 or more the mayor's annual salary shall be $3,500 and that of councilman $3,000."

SEC. 10. Civil service commissioners—terms. That section 1056a 32 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the first two sentences thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"In cities having a population of 25,000 and over the council shall, and in cities having a population of 7,000 and less than 25,000 the council may, immediately after organizing, by ordinance, appoint three civil service commissioners, who shall hold office, one until the first Monday in April of the second year after his appointment, one until the first Monday in April of the fourth year after his appointment, and one until the first Monday in April of the sixth year after his appointment: Provided, however, That in all cases in which no civil service commissioners are appointed by the council, the council shall have the same powers and shall exercise and perform all the duties devolving upon such commissioners, as provided for in this act. In cities wherein civil service commissioners have been appointed under the provisions of this act each succeeding council shall, as soon as practicable after organizing, appoint one commissioner for six years, who shall take the place of the commissioner whose term of office expires."

SEC. 11. Abandonment of commission plan of government. That section 1056a 39 of chapter 14c of the supplement to the code, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of that portion of said section beginning with the word "Shall," in the ninth line thereof, and closing with the word "charter," in the twelfth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Shall the city of (name of city) abandon its organization under chapter 14c of the supplement of the code, 1907, as amended by the acts of the thirty-third general assembly, and become a city under the general law governing cities, or, if now organized under special charter, shall resume said special charter?"

SEC. 12. In effect: This act being deemed of immediate importance, shall take effect and be in full force from and after its publication in the Register and Leader and the Des Moines Capital, newspapers published at Des Moines, Iowa.

Approved, March 30, A. D. 1909.

I hereby certify that the foregoing act was published in the Register and Leader and Des Moines Capital April 1, A. D. 1909.

W. C. HAYWARD, Secretary of State.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, April 13, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 10, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, April 6, was read and approved.

OATH OF OFFICE.

The oath of office was administered by the Speaker to Mr. MCDERMOTT and Mr. SABATH, Representatives from the State of Illinois; Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. PICKETT, Representatives from the State of Iowa; Mr. LOUD and Mr. YOUNG, Representatives from the State of Michigan; Mr. TAYLOR, a Representative from the State of Ohio; Mr. GODWIN, a Representative from the State of North Carolina; and Mr. HOWARD, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

MINORITY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 34.

Resolved, That during the Sixty-second Congress, and until the organization of the Sixty-third Congress, Joseph G. Rogers, of Pennsylvania, be authorized to act as special employee of the House of Representatives, to receive compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum; that Joseph C. Weir, of the State of Illinois, and John H. Hollingsworth, of the State of New York, be authorized to act as special employees and pair clerks, at a compensation of $1,800 per annum each; and that Bert W. Kennedy, of the State of Michigan, and Frank W. Collier, of the State of Wisconsin, be authorized to act as messengers, at a compensation of $1,500 each; and that A. W. Chaffee, of the State of Nebraska, be authorized to act as minority telephone operator, at a compensation of $1,200 per annum.

Said officers shall at all times be under control of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and they shall be subject to removal for cause at any time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a provision for the House employees conceded to the minority by the majority.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he has compared the list and if it is just exactly in accordance with what was conceded by the majority?

Mr. DALZELL. It is identical. I have compared it with the provision in the legislative bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] for unanimous consent?

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to make an inquiry. In this list, do you not bring in one position that was formerly controlled by the Doorkeeper?

Mr. DALZELL. This appointment is made in the same way it has always been made in previous Congresses.

Mr. LLOYD. There is no attempt on the part of the minority to take any advantage of the majority. They are now simply seeking to obtain places for the minority side which have heretofore been held by the minority side, but which formerly was Democratic instead of Republican.

Mr. DALZELL. That is right.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. If I understand it, the employees provided for in this resolution are similar to what were known as the Democratic employees nominated by the Democratic caucus and agreed to by the House.

Several MEMBERS. No; the Republican caucus.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I think I am right. They are the same character of employees, so far as positions are concerned, that the Democratic caucus presented at the beginning of the Sixty-first Congress, and which were conceded to the minority by the majority on resolutions that theretofore had been offered. Is not that correct?

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me a moment, I think the gentleman from Georgia is mistaken in that. I understand that this position was originally filled by a gentleman named Blanchard, on the Democratic side, but subsequently the majority took the place and appointed to fill it a gentleman named Earle that we have never seen around here.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman is mista[illegible]. I am satisfied that I am correct in the statement I made.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain the matter about which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] speaks. Mr. Blanchard did represent the majority, in charge of the telephone. Unfortunately—and I say unfortunately by intention—he has been removed, and that is the thing about which Mr. CARLIN complains.

Mr. CARLIN. Exactly.

Mr. LLOYD. But notwithstanding that, I think this House should act fairly with the minority, and this place belongs to the minority. I do not think that side of the House ought to be held responsible for the misconduct of one man.

Mr. CARLIN. I was just trying to get at the truth about it. I am in favor of the minority having all they are entitled to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CERTAIN COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged resolution, which I ask that the Clerk will read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 35.

Resolved, That the following-named positions under the committees of the House as organized in the Sixty-first Congress are entirely unnecessary and useless, and that none of said positions as hereinafter named shall be continued or maintained or created during the Sixty-second Congress, viz: Assistant clerk and stenographer to the Ways and Means Committee, whose salary is $2,000 per annum; assistant clerk to Committee on Accounts, whose salary is $1,800 per annum; assistant clerk to Committee on Agriculture, whose salary is $1,800 per annum; assistant clerk to Committee on Claims, whose salary is $1,200 per annum; assistant clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia, whose salary is $1,800 per annum; assistant clerk to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, whose salary is $1,800 per annum; assistant clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, whose salary is $1,500 per annum; assistant clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs, whose salary is $1,800 per annum; stenographer to Committee on Invalid Pensions, whose salary is $2,190 per annum; stenographer to Committee on Invalid Pensions (for session), whose salary is $100 per month; assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, whose salary is $1,200 per annum; clerk to continue digest of claims to Committee on War Claims, whose salary is $2,500 per annum; stenographer (for session) to Committee on War Claims, whose salary is $75 per month; assistant clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency, whose salary is $1,200 per annum; assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Lands, whose salary is $1,200 per annum; session clerk to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, whose salary is $6 per day; session clerks, whose salaries are $125 per month each, for the following-named committees, viz: Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this proposition is offered as a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not privileged. It should go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. On that, Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Florida on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, Rule IX of the rules recently adopted by this House, and which is an exact copy of Rule IX of the rules of the Sixty-first Congress, from which I read, provides:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members—

And so forth.

That rule has been construed by a number of Speakers of this House in past years, and, regardless of the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I assert that any resolution which affects the organization of the House is privileged by every recorded decision every time the question has been presented for decision.

For instance, in Hinds' Precedents, Volume I, section 189—which I do not contend is analogous to this particular case, because it refers to officers of the House, and I understand the difference between officers and employees—the Speaker held that a resolution that the House proceed to the election of an officer presents a question of privilege.

In Hinds' Precedents, Volume IV, section 4407, a resolution establishing certain select committees is held privileged. Why? Because it relates to the organization of the House. I have five volumes of Hinds' Precedents here, full of these decisions, and it has always been held, whenever a resolution was offered which related in any way to the organization of the House, that it was privileged under this rule.

And surely, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], logician as he is, and parliamentarian without a peer perhaps, on this side of the House at least, will not contend that the selection of committee clerks, who are to be instrumentalities for carrying out the will of the House, is not a step relating to the organization of the House.

These clerks have not been selected. The House committees have not been selected. Therefore these employees can not be selected until the committees are chosen and until they meet and organize. Then they select their respective clerical forces.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, and there is abundant authority here for that, that at any time before the organization is perfected a resolution relating to that organization is absolutely privileged under the rules.

But the House has gone even further than that, Mr. Speaker. In Volume V of Hinds' Precedents, section 7273, a resolution assigning a room to a committee was held to present a question of privilege. Yet it is to be contended here that although the mere assignment of a committee room to a committee is privileged, when you come to select the agents who are to permit the committees to discharge their duties, and therefore carry out the will of the House, that that does not relate to the organization of the House. And the gentleman from Alabama will be driven to that position before the point of order can be sustained.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have offered this resolution to the House, in line with the declared policy of the majority. I will not attempt to discuss the merits of it at this time. Gentlemen can examine these committees and find that they are loaded down with employees drawing immense salaries, when there is absolutely no more use for some of them than "a hog has use for a side pocket." [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have not examined all the committees, to know whether the places that the gentleman from Florida desires to abolish are needed by the committees to do useful work. This side of the House has already agreed to cut the employees of this House to the amount of $180,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he thinks that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, which frames a bill once every two years, needs a clerk, an assistant clerk, and a janitor?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just stated to the gentleman and to the House that I am not familiar with the workings of all these committees, and I am not advised as to whether that committee, and possibly others, have clerks that are not needed; but I do not think that a question of this kind should be disposed of by the House without proper investigation. It ought to go to a proper committee to consider it and report to the House, if it is to be considered at all. For that reason I have made the point of order that this is not a privileged matter. Now, I agree with the gentleman that one of the elective officers of this House, the Speaker himself, for instance, may be removed from office upon motion, and that would be a privileged motion; but some of these places that the gentleman names in his resolution are session clerks, not yet provided for at all. Others are clerks of committees, that are appointed by the chairmen of those committees, discharged by the chairmen, and are statutory places. Other places are not——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit one question right there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman mean to say that the assistant clerks are provided for by statute?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know whether all of them named in the resolution are provided for by statute or not, because I have not had an opportunity to read the resolution, but I know that many are.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman name one assistant clerk provided for by statute that is named in the resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The assistant clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means is provided for by statute and carried under the general appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it not true that this resolution abolishes only one assistant clerk and leaves a clerk and an assistant clerk for your committee, and that this is a minor assistant clerk?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, all of the clerks of that committee are provided for by statute, and their pay does not come out of the contingent fund of the House. I understand that they hold a statutory place; and as to the necessity for these committee clerks, I will say to the gentleman from Florida that not only are the men that are provided for by statute for the Ways and Means Committee working every day, but there is an additional force endeavoring to prepare the legislation that this House is demanding to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman is now discussing the merits of the resolution, which I scrupulously avoided. I am ready to meet that issue when the time comes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman started the discussion on the merits of the question, but I recognize that it is not in order. I simply say that this is not a privileged question. I do not deny the right of this House as a privileged matter to remove one of the elective officers of this House or to remove a committee of this House, but I say that these places are established by statute, that the salary runs unless we abolish them by statute, that they are not designated by this House, but are designated by the chairmen of the committees, and therefore I say that a resolution of this kind should be referred to the appropriate committee in the House for consideration, to report it back in the regular order, and is not a privileged matter to be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained and the resolution is referred to the Committee on Accounts.

CLALLAM TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter and a petition signed by the Clallam Tribe of Indians of the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the papers which he holds in his hand.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not ask to have them read. It is a letter that I have received from an Indian, a member of the Clallam Tribe, and a petition signed by the men of that tribe in regard to the way they have been treated by the United States Government. In other words, in 1855 this Government entered into a treaty with the Indians which they claim the Government has not kept. This letter and the petition are from the Indians themselves, and are brief, and I think they contain information which the House ought to have.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Washington that he ask permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and then print the letter and petition. It has not been the custom to grant permission to have petitions printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MURDOCK. What purpose will it serve to print this petition and letter in the RECORD?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It will serve the purpose of furnishing information to the House. This Clallam Tribe of Indians claim that the treaty with them has not been kept by the Government; that it took all their land, and that they have received nothing in return. I think it ought to go into the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand, this is a memorial from an individual touching Indian property.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; it is a brief statement by one Indian and a memorial signed by the members of the tribe.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman the memorial to present with the letter?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNION, WASH., December 22, 1910.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am sending you a petition signed by Indians of the Clallam Tribe. They are a remnant of a once large and powerful tribe occuping lands on the American side of the straits as far as the lands occupied by the Makah or Neah Bay Indians. They do not now number much more than 200 souls, adults, children, and all. About half of these Indians have purchased a small tract of land near Dungeness, Jefferson County, upon which they have a small village. The Government maintains a day school in this village. But they find these small tracts of land not large enough to make a living on, so they are compelled at times to leave and go where they could earn their living in other lines of work. The other half make their homes in Port Gamble, Kitsap County, on a sand spit owned by the Puget Mill Co. The Government also maintained a day school in this village up to July 1, 1910, when it was abolished for no apparent reason, but an injustice, as there are about 25 children in the village. The Indians' rights to live on land owned by the mill company rests entirely with the company. In the event of a change of management of the company's affairs, and in case a new management is opposed to the Indians living on their lands and orders them to vacate the premises, where would they go? They would be practically homeless.

I am an Indian also, belonging to the Skokomish Tribe. I was in the Government Indian service since September, 1902, as teacher. On December 1, 1909, I was transferred from the Skokomish day school to the Port Gamble day school, which I taught till June 30, 1910. This school was then abolished and I was transferred to Fort Peck Reservation, Mont. I declined the transfer and resigned. It was while I was in charge of the Port Gamble school that I saw the efforts of these Indians to acquire lands upon which they could build homes of their own. But the price of land is much more than their slender means could meet. I believe that arrangements could be made with the Puget Mill Co. for a piece of logged-off land on the water front, as these Indians are a part of the laboring population of Port Gamble, and do all their trading there. I would be glad to furnish any information in the matter, and I join with the petitioners in begging you, in the name of humanity and justice, to do something for this people, once the proud possessors of all the lands now occupied by white citizens who have become prosperous and independent.

Very respectfully,

ANDREW P. PETERSON.

PORT GAMBLE, WASH., December, 1910.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On January 26, 1855, a treaty was signed by Gov. Isaac I. Stevens, representing the United States, and the chiefs and headmen of the Clallam, Skokomish, and Chemikum Tribes of Indians, in which these Indians ceded to the United States vast tracts of lands.

The Clallam Indians, in common with the other tribes of Indians, relinquished all their right, title, and interest in the lands occupied by them.

In consideration of the cession, the United States agreed to pay to the said tribes the sum of $60,000. Also the sum of $6,000 to be used in paying the expenses of the Indians to remove to the reservation, the said reservation being set aside by order of Executive, dated February 25, 1874, and containing 6 sections of land, situated in the Skokomish Valley, State of Washington (then Territory of Washington), County of Mason.

According to the treaty aforesaid, this reservation was to be occupied by the tribes mentioned in the treaty.

Now, we, your petitioners, are members of the Clallam Tribe. Our chiefs and headmen were signers of the treaty of Point no Point. We respectfully beg to state that since conveying to the United States all our rights and interests in and to the lands which our fathers and forefathers have occupied for countless generations we have not in manner molested the settlers to whom the United States gave these lands; we have kept our part of the treaty faithfully and have always lived on friendly terms with the white people.

Of the $66,000 which the United States promised to pay for our lands, all that we remember to have received were a few blankets, a few farming implements, and we can not say where or to whom the money was paid.

No one ever offered us a dollar of the $6,000 which was provided by the treaty to pay for our removal to the reservation.

When the 6 sections of land were reserved for our use in common with the other tribes, the Skokomish Tribe, in whose land the reserve was made, was given the prior rights to take up lands, and when each adult and head of a family had been allotted there was no land left for the Clallam Tribe. Consequently, we have never been allotted lands under the treaty.

A few of our tribe have purchased small tracts of land, upon which they have built homes, but they can not depend upon these little tracts for a living, as they are wholly inadequate.

We are desirous of building permanent homes for ourselves and our children on lands which we can call our own.

For this reason we are addressing you this and trespassing upon your valuable time.

We beg that you will, in any manner in which you see fit and in accordance with our treaty, secure lands for the Clallam Tribe of Indians.

We acknowledge our dependence on the Government of the United States, and we ask the Government protection in our rights, and we feel sure that when the facts are fully investigated we will be accorded our rights.

Your espousal of our cause will win our lasting gratitude.

Very respectfully submitted.

ADDITIONAL DELEGATES, COMMITTEES ON TERRITORIES AND PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rules provide that there shall be an additional Delegate on the Committee on Public Lands and two Delegates as additional members on the Committee on Territories. I ask unanimous consent that there may be elected as additional members to the Committee on Public Lands two Delegates instead of one, and four Delegates in place of two to the Committee on Territories. Of course it is known that these Delegates do not vote in the committees.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not understand what the request of the gentleman is, Mr Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rules of this House and of the last House provided that as additional members there might be appointed two Delegates to the Committee on Territories. It has been the custom heretofore, by unanimous consent, to appoint all of the Delegates on the Committee on Territories, and I desire to have that done again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield, I will state that in the last Congress the Delegates were put on these committees by unanimous consent. They have no vote in the committee and can not disturb the equilibrium of the committee. These committees are places where they naturally desire to be in order to keep up with the business of their Territories. I can see no objection whatever to the request of the gentleman from Illinois being granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the number of Delegates on the Committee on Public Lands be increased from one to two and on the Committee on Territories from two to four. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ASSIGNMENT OF ROOMS IN THE CAPITOL.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following as a privileged resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 33.

Resolved, That the following assignments of rooms in the Capitol and House Office Building be, and the same are hereby, made:

1. To the Committee on Pensions, rooms 222 and 223 in the House Office Building.

2. To the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, the room in the House Office Building heretofore assigned to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics.

3. To the Committee on Mines and Mining, the rooms in the House Office Building heretofore assigned to the Committee on Militia, Nos. 289 and 289–A.

4. To the Committee on Rules, as additional space, the room in the Capitol Building heretofore occupied by the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

5. To the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, the room in the Capitol Building heretofore assigned to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the room heretofore assigned to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

6. To the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, two of the rooms in the House Office Building heretofore assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary, being room No. 483, and the committee room adjacent thereto.

7. To the Committee on the Judiciary, the room in the House Office Building, No. 379, and the hearing room adjacent thereto.

8. To the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, the room on the gallery floor, No. 49, in the Capitol Building, heretofore assigned to the Committee on Pensions, and the room heretofore assigned to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

9. To the minority conference, as additional space, room on the principal floor, No. 5, heretofore assigned to the Committee on Pensions, and the room on the ground floor, No. 5, heretofore assigned to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

10. That the caucus room in the House Office Building be assigned for general hearing room for committees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the resolution as to its being privileged.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I find there is a typographical error in paragraph 1. It should be rooms 221 and 223, and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be modified in that respect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification of the resolution as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MANN. Without affecting the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, without affecting the point of order. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt that the resolution is in order as a privileged resolution.

Mr. MANN. Let us first refer to the resolution. I would ask the gentleman if he will yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I thought, as I heard the resolution read, that there was some discrepancy in reference to the assignment of the rooms formerly occupied by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER. I think not. The understanding is that the minority shall have the room on this floor heretofore occupied by the Committee on Pensions, and, in addition to that, the committee room immediately under that, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inform the gentleman that the minority already has the room formerly occupied by the Committee on Pensions on this floor.

Mr. PALMER. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. And it is not necessary to carry that in this resolution.

Mr. PALMER. It was only to put it all in one basket, put it all on record in one place, that we put it in this resolution. I understood, in my conference with the gentleman from Illinois, that that is all the minority desired. Now, as to the other pension room, I refer to the room which is marked in the diagram in the Congressional Directory as room 49 on the gallery floor, immediately over the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and adjoining the room of the Committee on Pacific Railroads. The resolution transfers the room of the Committee on Pacific Railroads to the Committee on Rules, and gives the adjoining room to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, together with the small inside room across the hall, which becomes vacant.

Mr. MANN. To that part of it I have no objection, of course. The two rooms—the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions—were formerly assigned in the last House to the Committee on Pensions. Where does the gentleman get the numbering of the rooms in the Capitol?

Mr. PALMER. I took that from the Congressional Directory map. I do not know whether it is official, or anything of the sort, but it is shown upon the diagram as printed in the Congressional Directory. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CARLIN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Does it change the Judiciary Committee rooms?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Illinois had not concluded his questions, I think.

Mr. MANN. In this number 9 you say the minority conference has additional space. What you intend there is that they are assigned both of these rooms, and that is all the space they have.

Mr. PALMER. I was under the impression that the minority conference had use of some space in the House Office Building.

Mr. MANN. They have not.

Mr. PALMER. There is a minority room——

Mr. MANN. A minority room, that is true.

Mr. PALMER. That is an explanation of it.

Mr. MANN. Now, I want to ask the gentleman further in reference to the assignment of the Committee on the Judiciary. The large room over there, diagonally across the building from the Committee on Ways and Means, and similar to the room of the Committee on Ways and Means, was by order of the Sixtieth Congress reserved as a special committee room, with the design of permitting any of the committees of the House which have to have hearings to have hearings in that committee room when they had a large number of people. I notice now the proposition is that the Committee on the Judiciary is assigned the large caucus room for hearings. It is quite certain that the caucus room will not be suited for hearings. The room you now propose to assign to the Committee on the Judiciary will not be suited to the Committee on the Judiciary for ordinary business. My committee had hearings in the room, and I can assure the gentlemen on the Committee on the Judiciary that if they take that room and only one other room, and intend to have all their hearings in that room, or rather, all the meetings in that room, they will not find it very satisfactory. The caucus room will never be suited for a hearing room, in my judgment.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, the way that has come about is this: The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, by reason of the desire to accommodate the convenience of the chairman, who was anxious to remain in the Capitol Building, has been occupying a very small room in the Capitol Building. Their hearings are numerous, I understand, and the attendance at the hearings is considerable, and the prospective chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, desirous of getting larger quarters—and, in my judgment, they are entitled to larger quarters——

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. PALMER (continuing). Asked for committee rooms 153 and 154, in the House Office Building. Those rooms have been used ever since the erection of the House Office Building for the use of special committees, and it is important that they should be retained for that purpose. The problem with us was where to put the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I want to further explain that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, being a large committee and having necessarily large hearings, after they found they could not get Nos. 153 and 154, wanted the rooms of the Committee on Militia, which has been abolished. It was impossible to give them those rooms, because of the conflicting necessities of other committees, and the Committee on the Judiciary, having been increased in size, is now too large to occupy the committee room in its present suite, and the prospective chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary states that the so-called hearing room, to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred as being diagonally across the building from the Committee on Ways and Means, was originally designed for the occupancy of the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it was actually occupied by the Committee on the Judiciary for a brief period, with the name of the committee put over its doors, but that Judge Jenkins, who was then the chairman of the committee, refused to move into it, and it was finally put upstairs in the other quarters.

The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary says that he will give up the three rooms to which he is now entitled and take only the two, if he can have the one large hearing room. Further than that, the superintendent of the House Office Building says that the hearing room has been inadequate for the purposes of public hearings; that upon three or four occasions during the Sixty-first Congress the attendance was so large that it overflowed into the hall, notably during the hearings of the Industrial Arts and Expositions Committee on the question of a site for the holding of the Panama Exposition, and one or two other hearings which I have forgotten. He says that the caucus room, without any expense, can be fitted up for a hearing room, which will be fully adequate to supply the needs of any committee in the House which must have a large general hearing space. I think, and I will say that I puzzled over this thing for a couple of days at the request of these various chairmen in an attempt to act as a clearing house and to get all desires and necessities satisfied, that the arrangement which we have worked out is the only feasible, if not the only possible, solution of the problem.

Mr. CARLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN]?

Mr. PALMER. I do.

Mr. CARLIN. What becomes of the rooms now occupied by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. PALMER. They go to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization—two of them.

Mr. CARLIN. What becomes of the other room?

Mr. PALMER. It is an office room.

Mr. CARLIN. Now, I wanted to ask the gentleman by what authority this resolution is reported here? Who has the authority to make this distribution of rooms?

Mr. PALMER. I do not know that anybody has any particular authority over the question. It is a privileged matter, which any gentleman may call up on the floor of the House, but I will state to the gentleman with all frankness how I came to do this work. The prospective chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means was being asked, as the floor leader on this side, by the chairmen of the various committees to assign different quarters to them, assuming that, while no particular person had the jurisdiction, he, as the leader, might be willing to assume it.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is a reasonably busy man, and has upon his committee a few young, live, healthy fellows whom he thinks he can work, and he asked me to take the work off his shoulders, and I am simply doing it as a favor to the gentleman from Alabama, who was asked by a number of other Members to work this thing out. I do not want to assume any jurisdiction in the matter.

Mr. CARLIN. That is exactly what the gentleman is doing.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Virginia can offer a resolution if he desires.

Mr. CARLIN. I understand what my privileges are, but I am trying to get at whose duty it is to assign these rooms, and whether the Ways and Means Committee are assuming to do things which they have nothing to do with.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, this is not——

Mr. CARLIN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that there is a commission authorized by law which has heretofore exercised this authority.

Mr. PALMER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will say in answer to that——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PALMER (continuing). That the law is this: That as to vacant, unassigned rooms in the Capitol the Speaker has jurisdiction and may assign any committee to any vacant room in the Capitol that he desires. As to rooms that are occupied, the proper practice is for a resolution of the House to be passed covering the question. And I will say that this is a matter that somebody has had to assume jurisdiction of always. I think it is a fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in recent Congresses, without having any more authority in the premises than any other Member in the House, but being an extremely willing worker, took upon himself the job of satisfying the various and conflicting requirements of committee-room assignments.

Mr. CARLIN. And the gentleman now has taken the job of the gentleman from Illinois upon himself?

Mr. PALMER. No; I have explained to the gentleman from Virginia why I introduced the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. PALMER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN].

Mr. CARLIN. I was going to say this, that I have no earthly objection to somebody doing this work.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman seems to have.

Mr. CARLIN. I think it ought to be done, but I do not want to consume the time of this valuable Ways and Means Committee, appointed here for a specific purpose, namely, revising the tariff, with looking after matters of patronage, reducing charwomen and expenses, and now assigning offices, when they have more important work to do.

Mr. PALMER. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that the valuable time of the Committee on Ways and Means has not been taken up more than about a minute by this resolution, and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means can not prevent Members of the House from coming to him and asking him to do this thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield a moment, Mr. Speaker, I will say this, that a number of gentlemen on this side of the House found out that their committee rooms were unsatisfactory and that they were old rooms, and that there was an opportunity to move into better rooms, and they wanted to make changes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desired to make some changes with reference to the minority room. They came to me and asked me to do it, and I had so many things on my hands to attend to that I did not have the time to attend to it. It was not the Ways and Means Committee that took the matter up. I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] to take the matter off of my hands and see the gentleman from Illinois, and to see the gentlemen on this side who wanted to change their rooms, and to report the matter to this House, so that the House could dispose of it, and so that our colleagues could be satisfied in reference to their rooms. Somebody had to do it.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman understands that he had no more to do with that than any other individual Member of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly not; but some individual Member of the House had the right to do it.

Mr. CARLIN. The House had the right to do it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Virginia will permit, I will say that the committee of which I am to be the chairman had considerable trouble about sufficient space, and we found out that somebody had to take hold of the matter and work out a solution of the conflicts between gentlemen and committees. Accordingly, we called upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and asked them if they could help us out.

Mr. CARLIN. It seems to me it is becoming the habit of Members to call on them for everything that is done around here.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. They have been doing so well what they have done and what has been intrusted to them to do that I think we do well in going to them.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman is perfectly satisfied, apparently, because he has got what he wanted.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I got one small additional room.

Mr. CARLIN. But the gentleman concedes that he did get an additional room. I simply wanted to ascertain the authority by which we are doing this. It may be that I may want to change my room hereafter, and in that case I shall want to know how to go about it and who to go to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can assure the gentleman that there is no jurisdiction given to any committee of this House to attend to this matter, and the only place that the gentleman can go to is this House; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, representing a number of his colleagues, has brought the matter to the floor of the House, the only place to which it can go.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PALMER. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an additional statement in reference to this matter, partly in justice to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the gentleman from Alabama. At the beginning of the Sixtieth Congress, four years ago, when Congress met—of course, later in the year—the House Office Building was approaching completion, and there was no method then devised for assigning rooms. I offered a resolution for the appointment of a special committee, and I was afterwards made chairman of that special committee, consisting of six members. We made the recommendations to the House for the assignment of committee rooms both in the House Office Building and in the Capitol. As chairman of that committee I continued in operation until the end of the Sixtieth Congress. There was no committee appointed in the last Congress. But gentlemen of the House, chairmen of committees, and others who desired changes of committee rooms, came to me, there seeming to be no special provision in the rules for the reference of such a matter to a committee, and the result was that during the last Congress, on several occasions, I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of resolutions reassigning or making assignments of rooms. Gentlemen on that side of the House became so in the habit of coming to me about assignments of rooms that when the majority was transferred, and the responsibility and control with it, a number of the prospective chairmen of committees, both at the end of the last session of Congress and since that time, have appealed to me in reference to the assignment of rooms. It did not seem to me that it was the duty of any Member on this side of the House to arrogate to himself the duty of offering a resolution on the subject.

Therefore I asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the floor leader on that side of the House, if he would not take up the matter of the assignment of rooms, so that gentlemen who came to me might be referred by me to him, and other gentlemen might go to him. I understand that he referred the matter to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who now has the floor, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania did me the courtesy to come to me and discuss the matter with me.

When we made the original assignment of rooms to the Committee on Mines and Mining, the chairman, then being Mr. Huff, of Pennsylvania, was exceedingly anxious to remain in the Capitol Building in the room he then occupied. I objected to it for a long time, because the room was not sufficient, but finally we let him have his way. The same was true of one or two other committees, which ought to be transferred to the House Office Building. That was true of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, which had one little room, a very desirable room, except that it was very small, having a west front, in the old library part of the Capitol.

So far as I am concerned, I shall make no objection to the assignment of the room now proposed, after the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] that the Superintendent of the Capitol, Mr. Woods, or his force, state that the caucus room can be made amply sufficient for committee meetings, and put in such shape that people can be heard in it without difficulty.

Mr. PALMER. I will say to the gentleman that that statement was made by Mr. Woolley.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Woolley, of course, is the representative of Mr. Woods in charge of the House Office Building. I have considerable doubt about it, although it may be that by putting up a large number of hangings in the room they can reduce the reverberations so that a small number of people can be heard. Even in the general committee room over there now, when only a few Members are present, it is very difficult to be heard, on account of the echo, although we have hangings up.

I suggest to the gentleman, who offers his resolution as a privileged one, that I hope there will be no objection to its passage by unanimous consent. I do not think it is a privileged resolution, and I do not think it wise to endeavor to establish the precedent that it is a privileged resolution, so that any Member at any time can take the floor to offer a privileged resolution, using it possibly for obstructive purposes, if not for the purpose of obtaining a change of room. I hope that, if there be no objection to the resolution, the gentleman will ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I will say in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that there is no difficulty about making the precedent, because the precedent has already been made. Mr. Garfield, of Ohio, presented a similar resolution many years ago, and the Speaker held it to be privileged.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. But in view of what the gentleman from Illinois has just stated I am perfectly willing to prefer the request in that way, and I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has been reported.

Mr. MANN. In view of the statement of the gentleman I hope he will yield to me to make this statement——

Mr. PALMER. Why, certainly.

Mr. MANN. When I was looking after this matter I went over the subject as carefully as I could with the then parliamentarian of the House and with others, and while I do not remember the opinion of Mr. HINDS, now the distinguished Member from Maine, my own impression was that it was not a privileged resolution, notwithstanding the precedent that the gentleman refers to, which I hope will not be followed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has been under discussion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The question being taken, the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PALMER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ASSIGNMENT OF ROOM FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the room in the Capitol now temporarily occupied by the Journal clerk be, and the same hereby is, assigned to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that the Journal clerk be, and he hereby is, assigned to the room in the Capitol prepared for him by the Superintendent of the Capitol.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that there is no room temporarily occupied by the Journal clerk; it is permanently occupied by him. The file room has been moved to the one adjoining the Journal clerk's room.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from New York will not ask for the consideration of this resolution at the present time, but will call it up later after we have had time to look into it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York that the room now occupied by the Journal clerk adjoins and belongs to the Committee on Foreign Affairs——

Mr. MANN. It never has, never was, and never did.

Mr. SULZER. And the Journal clerk, I am informed, is only occupying it temporarily.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York is mistaken. I made the assignment.

Mr. SULZER. The Superintendent of the Capitol will assign the Journal clerk a suitable room.

Mr. MANN. But we are all interested in the room for the Journal clerk. Every Representative has to go there. It is now in connection with the file room, and the two rooms ought to be together. It is a matter of convenience. I hope the gentleman will postpone the consideration of his resolution until we can ascertain about it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said, I will withdraw the resolution until gentlemen can inform themselves about it.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

HOMESTEAD GRANTS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 8), which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 13 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I submit herewith an act of the Philippine Legislature amending the public-land laws of the Philippine Islands by specifying the officials before whom the final evidence to perfect homestead grants may be taken. The law as it stands requires applicants for homesteads to furnish certain affidavits, but does not indicate the officials before whom they may be executed.

The amendment seems essential to a proper understanding by homesteaders as to what is required of them. I have therefore approved the act, in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress above mentioned.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 10, 1911.

COMMISSION ON HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

The SPEAKER announced the following appointment:

JOSEPH G. CANNON as a member of the commission in control of the House Office Building, authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 4, 1907, to succeed Walter I. Smith, resigned.

RATIFICATION OF THE INCOME-TAX AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the secretary of state of Kansas announcing the ratification of the income-tax amendment:

STATE OF KANSAS, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
Topeka, April 6, 1911.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith certified copy of senate concurrent resolution No. 2, in accordance with the terms of said resolution.

Very respectfully,
CHAS. H. SESSIONS,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF KANSAS, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Charles H. Sessions, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of senate concurrent resolution No. 2, relating to a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, passed by the Legislature of the State of Kansas and approved by the governor March 6, 1911, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed my official seal.

Done at the city of Topeka this 4th day of April, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] CHAS. H. SESSIONS, Secretary of State.

Senate concurrent resolution 2—Relating to a certain proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas (the House of Representatives concurring therein):

Whereas the Congress of the United States has submitted the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States to the legislatures of the several States of the Union for their ratification, viz:

"Article XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration:"

Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Kansas (the House of Representatives concurring), That the foregoing proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same is hereby, ratified: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly certified by the presiding officers of the two houses of the legislature, the chief clerk of the house and secretary of the senate, by the governor of the State of Kansas, certified under the great seal of the State of Kansas, be transmitted to the President of the United States, and to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate, and passed that body January 19, 1911.

House amendment concurred in March 2, 1911.

RICHARD J. HOPKINS,
President of the Senate.
WALTER A. JOHNSON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house February 18, 1911.

G. H. BUCKMAN,
Speaker of the House.
EARL AKERS,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Approved, March 6, 1911.

W. R. STUBBS, Governor.

STATE OF KANSAS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Office of the Governor.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, W. R. Stubbs, governor of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of senate concurrent resolution No. 2, duly certified by the president of the senate of the State of Kansas and the secretary of the senate and speaker of the house and clerk of the house of the State of Kansas, approved by the governor of the State of Kansas and certified under the hand and seal of the secretary of state of the State of Kansas:

And I do further certify that Charles H. Sessions is the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state of the State of Kansas and having in charge the original bills and resolutions adopted by the Legislature of said State.

In witness whereof I, W. R. Stubbs, governor of the State of Kansas, have caused my hand, as governor, and the great seal of the State of Kansas to be hereto attached this 5th day of April, 1911.

[SEAL.] W. R. STUBBS, Governor.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent the following leaves of absence were granted:

To Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BATES, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. EVANS, for one week, on account of death in family.

To Mr. BURGESS, for two months, on account of illness.

To Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey, indefinitely, on account of death in family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Albert Freitag, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of John W. Mercer, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] this morning presented me with a list of the minority members of the committees. That list, with that of the majority members, has gone to the Printing Office to be printed. It will not be available for action to-day, but I will move the election of the committees to-morrow morning as soon as the House meets. I now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, April 11, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Apollo, Richard H. Richards, master (H. Doc. No. 6); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Sally, James Wallace, master (S. Doc. No. 4); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Yeatman, Roger Crane, master (S. Doc. No. 5); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Ellen Comstock, executrix of estate of Cyrus B. Comstock v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 7); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that on this list of committees that I have sent to the Clerk's desk there are two Democratic vacancies, one on the Committee on Accounts, which was created by an amendment to the rules after the Democratic caucus had adopted the list of Democratic members, and the other on the Committee on Revision of the Laws, which was left vacant through a mistake. I understand that there are five or six places that the minority have left vacant, which, of course, will be at their disposition to fill at any time.

Mr. MANN. There being two vacancies in the membership, which may possibly be filled by minority Members later.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, if the gentleman from Illinois desires to occupy any time on the question I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to ask a question for information. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] charged to the minority?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He is charged to the minority.

Mr. KENDALL. And his position on committees is to be deducted from the minority membership?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely. It has always been that way.

Mr. KENDALL. I simply wanted to inquire whether the majority had refused to recognize his right to representation upon committees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. Mr. BERGER is not a member of the majority party. He belongs to a party that is not in control in this House, and all parties that are not in control in this House belong to the minority. We gave Mr. BERGER the place on the committee on which he desired to be placed.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has criticized the Democratic side of the House because of the fact that it had increased some of the large committees of the House to 21 members, and of those members taken 14 and given 7 to the minority. I do not think it is a serious charge, but as I desire the RECORD to state our position in the matter, I have prepared a statement, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask the Clerk to read in my time, so that it may appear in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under a resolution of the Democratic caucus 15 committees of the House were increased to 21 members, to be divided 14 to the majority and 7 to the minority.

The representation of the two parties on these committees in the last Congress and in the present one is as follows:

Committees.	Sixty-first Congress.		Sixty-second Congress.
	Democrats.	Republicans.	Democrats.	Republicans.
1. Agriculture	7	12	14	7
2. Appropriations	6	11	14	7
3. Banking and Currency	7	12	14	7
4. District of Columbia	7	12	14	7
5. Foreign Affairs	7	12	14	7
6. Interstate and Foreign Commerce	6	12	14	7
7. Judiciary	6	12	14	7
8. Merchant Marine and Fisheries	7	12	14	7
9. Military Affairs	7	13	14	7
10. Naval Affairs	7	12	14	7
11. Insular Affairs	7	12	14	7
12. Post Offices and Post Roads	6	13	14	7
13. Public Lands	7	13	14	7
14. Rivers and Harbors	8	12	14	7
15. Ways and Means	7	12	14	7
Total	102	182	210	105

In the Sixty-first Congress there were 215 Republicans and 176 Democrats and independents when the committees were made up. In the Sixty-second Congress (the present one) there are 227 Democrats and 164 Republicans and independents.

These 15 committees had an aggregate membership in the Sixty-first Congress of 284 members, and in this Congress of 315. The Democratic minority had 102 places in the last Congress, and the Republican minority has been given 105 places in this Congress, an increase of three places, but the total membership of these committees has been increased from 284 to 315, so to maintain the relative proportion of numbers the equation would be as 284, the total number in the Sixty-first Congress, is to 102, the representation accorded the Democrats by the Republicans, as would 315 be to the number the minority would be entitled to if they had maintained their relative number in the House. 284 : 102 : : 315 : x=113.

The answer of course would be 113, but the Republicans came back with only 164 Members, as compared to 176 for the Democrats in the former Congress, so to ascertain what their relative strength on these committees should be, the equation would be to compare 164 Members with 113 committee places, as 176 Members would compare with the answer. 164 : 113 : : 176 : x=105.

The resulting answer is 105 Members on the 15 committees that were increased in numbers, and this is exactly what the Democrats gave the Republican minority on these committees.

On the other committees in the House the Republicans were given the same representation that the Democrats had before in the same proportion of members to the relative size of the committees, notwithstanding the fact that the Republican minority is much smaller in members than was the Democratic minority in the last Congress. So that the Republicans have more places in proportion to the number of places on the committees and their Members in the House than was accorded the Democrats in the last Congress by the Republicans.

Six committees were abolished because they were a useless charge on the Treasury, the Democrats losing 44 and the Republicans 30 places, as they were apportioned in the last Congress.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice that in the figures that the gentleman gives he charges to the Republicans on committees the Delegates of the last Congress. Does the gentleman think that that is a fair representation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not in this list of committees. There is no Delegate on this proposition at all.

Mr. MANN. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Clerk just read that in the last House the Republicans had 13 on the Committee on Military Affairs and the Democrats 7. That included the Delegates. There are other cases in the same list. Evidently whoever prepared that did not consider the difference between a voting member of the committee and a looking-on member.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The only men who were put on this committee as Delegates were placed there because the places were created as unanimous-consent places, and of course, if the gentleman has the Delegates to fill the places, he is chargeable with them. If we had had the Delegates, we would have been chargeable with them also.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that under the rules the number on a committee is fixed at a certain figure and Delegates are not included in that number at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They are on some committees.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; in no case is a Delegate included as a part of the membership of a committee where the number of the committee is given. In every case the Delegate is an additional member of the committee, made by the rules an additional member and not a portion of the number fixed by the rules, but in the gentleman's figures he has included the Delegates as part of the number on the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On which committee?

Mr. MANN. The Military Affairs is one. I caught others; at least one other, as they were being read. I will not undertake to say which it was.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman is mistaken in his statement, but if I did include one it would not change the equation.

Mr. MANN. More than one——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. The figures will speak for themselves.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not intend to change them.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman does not intend to do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois this: He has charged this side of the House, in the public press, with being unfair to the minority. Now, I want to say to him that when we increased these 15 big committees to the size of 21 and took two-thirds for our side and one-third for his side we, in the first place, gave him two more Members—three more Members—he could find places for on that side of the House than we had in the last Congress.

Mr. MANN. Two more is correct.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. More than that, on these 15 committees when you work out the relative proportion of the membership of the two sides of this House you have got identically on these committees the same proportion to-day that we had in the last Congress, and you can not figure it any other way. That proportion, if you work out the ratio in proportion to the membership, is 105 places and we have given 105 places. Now, more than that, on all the other committees of this House, many of them important committees, although we increase our majority over your majority, there we not only give you as many places as we had before, but we have given you a few additional places to what we had before on these committees. We have not cut you down at all. More than that, this is the first time in the history of this House, so far as the memory of man runs to it, when a majority of this House has allowed the minority leader to bring a list of committee assignments to their committee and accept his assignment of his own people to represent his own party without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." [Loud and continued applause on the Democratic side.] It does not lie in the mouth of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois to charge this side of the Chamber with unfairness when he knows and I know, without calling names, that in the making up of the great committees of this House in the past men have been put on the committees to represent the minority side of the House who he knows and I know did not represent the political principles of the party to which they were charged. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Alabama answer one question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I can.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Has there ever been an instance throughout this whole country's history up to the present day when the minority party has been allowed such a small proportional share of representation on committees?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; in the last Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is that true of the important committees?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You asked me in reference to all the committees.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I asked you if it is true of the important committees, the ones which are under discussion, and not the small and unimportant committees which you have abolished.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me to answer him, I will say that I have already stated that in these 15 great committees the proportion in the number of the majority and the number of the minority—the relative proportion—on those committees to-day is identically what it was two years ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And on the smaller committees of the House you have a larger proportion of representation than we had two years ago.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in his facts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not entirely mistaken. I will ask the gentleman in what instance?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has asked you whether or not in the history of Congress any such proportion of representation was given to the minority on important committees. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in the Fifty-first Congress, known as the "Reed" Congress, where the representation was 166 Republicans to 159 Democrats, a majority of only 7, the Speaker only allowed a representation on the important committees, like Ways and Means—which consisted of 13 members—of the Democrats 5 members and the Republicans 8, and that upon the Committee on Appropriations, consisting of 15 members, the Democrats were only permitted to have 6, and that on the Judiciary Committee they were allowed the same proportion, and on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, consisting of 17 members, the Republicans were given 10 members and the Democrats 7? That was when the Republicans came back to power in the Fifty-first Congress. Is it not a fact that in this Congress the representation given by the majority to the Republicans now is far more favorable to the Republicans than was given to the Democrats by the Republican majority for the last 20 years when the Republicans had control?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no doubt the gentleman is right.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has had read at the Clerk's desk a complicated problem in mathematics, which even an expert or actuary would not be able to comprehend in its entirety without examining it. I want a few simple facts from the gentleman. I gathered from those figures that whereas on those 15 principal committees in the last Congress the majority had 182 members it now has 210. Is that correct?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, sir. You are entirely mistaken. The majority in the last Congress had 248.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Members of the 15 committees referred to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Two hundred and forty-eight members of these 15 committees.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Wait a minute. In the Sixty-first Congress the majority—that is, the Republican Party—had 182 members.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is precisely what I said.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And in this Congress the majority has 210.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is precisely what I inquired. That makes the majority gaining, by this readjustment of committees, 28 members, the difference between 182 and 210.

Mr. MANN. That includes five Delegates.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. As to that I am not aware.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. I will refer him to my list.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The minority on these 15 committees in the last Congress had 102 members.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I understood from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the other day that the Republicans now actually have only 104 instead of 105.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that the gentleman is making a speech and not asking a question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I am asking for the facts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will give the facts.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If I understand correctly, the minority has upon these 15 committees now, under the claim of the gentleman from Alabama, three more members than before.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman upon what hypothesis or theory he is endeavoring to convince the minority that it has the same proportion of the increase of the membership of these committees, when there has been an increase in the entire 15 committees of 31 members and the majority has taken an increase of 28 and the minority 3, or less than one-ninth of the increase?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It might be an impossible proposition for me to try to convince my distinguished friend of anything on this subject, but I want to say this: If you had received your proportion of increase in this Congress, without regard to the loss of Members, if the membership had been identically the same, the number of places you would have been entitled to on these 15 committees would have been 113 instead of 105. But you lost a number of men in proportionate representation. You have 25 less, or about that, and when you work out your relative proportion in loss of Members, it brings you down to 105, identically the number that we have given.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me to say just a word before I take my seat, I want to say it certainly will be impossible of demonstration; we have not the time at this moment to make the computation; but when out of an increase of 31 members the minority is given only 3 of the increase and the majority 28, or nine times as many, the minority certainly has not been treated the same as the majority.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If you work out the equation, you will find out.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that I will work it out, and I will later give the result.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield just for a little statement. The gentleman has stated, as I understood now, that the majority membership of these committees in the last House was 182. The gentleman must be in error about that, unless he has included the 5 Delegates. The actual majority membership representation in the last House was 177.

The gentleman has also stated that the minority representation was 102. The actual minority membership representation was 103.

Now, the gentleman's side has increased the committees by 35. It has given to the minority 2 of the increase, 1 going to the Republicans and 1 to the Socialists, and the gentleman's side has taken 33 of the increase. How, then, can the gentleman say that the proportion is the same, when, with a majority of 16 Members they get 33 more places on the 15 leading committees, which is more than two places to a Member, and when the fact is that the representation on the committees does not equal one place to a Member?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I stated the equation. In adding up the minority places on these committees—I think the total is 102—the gentleman's arithmetic does not agree with mine in one place. Possibly the gentleman is right. Possibly I am right.

But I want to say this further to the gentleman from Illinois: It is a well-known fact in this House that when the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee was made up, of which he had the honor to be the distinguished chairman, it was understood that it was made up at his suggestion and at his request at the last Congress, and when he suggested the making up of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee there were 12 Republicans and 6 Democrats placed on that committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is in the proportion of two to one.

When we made up these great legislative committees, not attempting to take any of your representation and place it at the weak points, but giving you full opportunity to place your battle line as strong as you can, we have only taken the proportionate representation that the gentleman from Illinois thought was fair in making up his own great committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I think it is due to me to say that I did not make up the committee. That ends that argument.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was so understood.

Mr. CANNON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield whatever time the gentleman desires.

Mr. CANNON. Three minutes or five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the reading of the percentage statement by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Frankly, it seems to me that in effect the statement darkens counsel where the fact is patent. The gentleman has referred to the organization of the House for four Congresses in the past, and more particularly I take it to the organization of the House in the Sixty-first Congress. There never has been a time in the history of the Government when the House could not have elected its committees under the rules, if it desired so to do; and yet, so far as I recollect, never perhaps but once or twice in the life of the Nation has the House elected its committees, preferring under all administrations to leave that matter to the Speaker, holding him responsible for the organization. So that what has been done in this respect in the past has been done substantially with the approval of the House. So much for that.

When I first became Speaker there had always been complaint that the minority was not organized for strength, and in a spirit of fairness, as I thought at that time, I tendered to the minority leader, Representative WILLIAMS, the request that he organize the minority; and I advised him that, while the majority was responsible for the organization, the appointments would be made substantially in accordance with his selections except where they interfered with the geographical plan of the majority by including on the same committee a disproportionate representation from a particular State or section. Representative WILLIAMS, the minority leader, organized the minority in three Congresses, and, so far as I recollect, his recommendations were literally adopted, with perhaps four or five exceptions, in cases where I, representing the majority, made objection. I believe in a majority of the instances he acquiesced in my view, and in perhaps two out of the five he said I, representing the majority, must assume the responsibility, which I did.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois such further time as he desires.

Mr. CANNON. Not much time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I was the object of much criticism in the country and of some criticism from the majority side. Nevertheless I do not regret my action.

At the last session of Congress it was determined by the then minority leader [Mr. CLARK of Missouri], as I was informed, that he would not organize the minority unless the organization he offered should be written in without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." I said the majority was responsible, and that I, representing the majority, would treat his recommendations in the same spirit that I had treated the recommendations of his predecessor in the three preceding Congresses. The gentleman declined, and I organized the minority. I did it to the best of my ability, and I am delighted to know that, following substantially the rule of seniority, you have practically accepted the organization that I made as Speaker of the House in the last Congress. [Applause on the Republican side]. I think that is quite a compliment to me and to the majority side.

That I made mistakes in organizing the majority, and perchance the minority, is I presume true; but, as the representative of the majority, I was responsible, and I performed my duty honestly, after diligent inquiry and consideration, and I have no apologies to make. I made mistakes; yes. I doubt if this House could be organized by any agency, whether by the Speaker, by the minority leader, or by a caucus, without mistakes being made. I have heard some rumblings from members of the present majority, so that perchance if you should all be placed under oath it might not appear that every individual is pleased with the organization. If all are pleased, I would be glad to be informed of that fact.

Now, coming down to the absolute merits of the proposition, I am not going to complain touching the action of the majority. If you have not given the minority sufficient representation, you are responsible. The majority is always responsible. You bear the responsibility for the organization, not only of the majority, but of the minority as well. You have allowed us to organize the minority, and our minority leader has made the organization. You are responsible for that. You are responsible for selecting the committees by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee. I have no objection to your doing so, because you have supreme power and absolute responsibility, and this Congress, and the House of Representatives composing a part of the Congress, are not going to be condemned or approved because of the personnel of the various committees. You will stand or fall by the legislation that you assist in enacting, and I am willing to abide that test. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 25 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at this time to detain the House with a dissertation on the mathematical situation. I propose to analyze the mathematics of this situation in some remarks which I shall have printed in the RECORD under the leave to extend a speech which I made a few days ago. But it is so easy as to the mathematics that a child capable of entering the third grade in school would know that the mathematics of the gentleman from Alabama, or whoever prepared the figures for him, are incorrect.

In the last House the Republicans had a majority of 47. In this House the Democrats have a majority of 63, only 16 more majority. They have increased the number of places on the 15 leading committees by 35, and of those places they have taken 33 and given the minority but 2. As the number of places on these committees is not equal to the number of Members in the House, it is mathematically impossible to prove that the ratio is the same when they now take more than twice as many new places as they have increased their majority.

I commend that statement to the gentleman who prepared the figures for the gentleman from Alabama. In the first place, they include the Delegates in their computation, not knowing that the Delegates were not members of the committee as fixed by the number in the rules, but under a special rule were added as additional members without the authority to vote in the committee at all. I suppose it is not strange that the gentleman from Alabama who has not served on one of these committees for years, because he has been on a more responsible committee, did not know that a Delegate was only seen and heard and had no vote.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word to this side of the House in regard to the committee assignments. The gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, the former Speaker of this House, made the committee assignments for four Congresses, and on this occasion, the responsibility having been placed on me by this side of the House and by that side of the House, I have made the recommendations which I made that are now up for approval by the House, working in connection with the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, the former Speaker; as to all the assignments which have now been proposed to this side of the House, I have availed myself of his knowledge, of his skill, of his superior wisdom in connection with them, and I hope that the assignments which have been made may receive the approval not only of this side of the House in general, but of each individual Member. [Applause.] I hope that it may help to result in a unified minority which, when the time rolls on a little further, will again become a powerful majority. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Texas desires to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, and I will yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand it, in the last Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs was composed of 18 members, and now it is composed of 19 members, and that additional member is a Republican. They have one more on the minority at this session than they had at the last Congress, and I do not think that is fair and just.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Texas, who has served on the Committee on Indian Affairs for years, and who now has his attention for the first time directed to the fact that the rules for years have provided for 19 members on the Committee on Indian Affairs, that no one apparently on the committee representing the majority discovered that fact, and they only named 11 majority members for the Committee on Indian Affairs, and left the balance of the committee to be named by me. Knowing the rules, we named 8 members of that committee. I called the attention of the Ways and Means Committee to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I called it to the gentleman's attention a few minutes ago.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas, having served for years on the committee, has not discovered the number allowed that committee by the rules. The gentleman can learn some things by asking questions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to see the amiable face of the ex-Speaker on the floor of the House to-day, while he seems to be so very fair in his statements. Mr. Speaker, I also have great respect for the distinguished leader of the minority of the House [Mr. MANN], but it seems to me that so far he has been dealing in rather trivial politics. He would have the country believe that the Democratic Party prevented his side from having due consideration when the rules came up for adoption last Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker, we accorded the gentleman's party 4 hours' debate, and we were willing to give an additional 40 minutes if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] had not objected. We also gave them the right of offering a substitute for our rules, and provided that in the substitute his party could embrace one amendment, or one hundred or more amendments, if they had chosen to do so.

We remember that for the preceding 14 years the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has risen in his place and offered the rules of the former Republican Congress without giving us the right to amend in any respect. If he had given us the privilege of offering a substitute, with only one amendment to the old rules, we would have been contented; and the country, perhaps, would have been satisfied. Democrats would have offered an amendment taking the power of appointing committees from the Speaker, thus restoring it where it belongs—to the membership of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] simply offered the rules of the former House and moved the previous question. We were not permitted the poor privilege of offering one amendment.

The gentleman from Illinois, the ex-Speaker of this House, is apparently very fair this morning in his statements. I have always believed that this is a Government of parties, and have thought the majority responsible for the Government when they are in the ascendancy and that the minority should be responsible for their own party affairs. After long deliberation it is evident to me that the minority should have the absolute right to fix their representation on standing committees, a privilege we are now according the minority. And if anyone will fairly investigate and make the calculation for himself he will ascertain we have done no injustice to gentlemen on that side of the House.

Let us take the committees in the Sixty-first Congress. The Committee on Agriculture was composed of 12 Republicans and 6 Democrats, the same proportion we have used in this Congress. On the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads the Republicans took 12 members and gave the Democrats 6. In constituting the Committee on the Judiciary the Republicans took 12 members and gave the Democrats 6. With the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the last Congress, the Republicans took 12 members and gave the Democrats 6; and we are dealing just as fairly with Republicans as they did with Democrats, and we intend that the country shall thoroughly understand it from this discussion to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that as Speaker in practically all instances he deferred to the minority leader, and that he yielded to the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS in the make-up of certain committees; that sometimes, for "geographical reasons" he could not concur with the selection made by that gentleman. Let us see. He removed from the Committee on Agriculture the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. He removed from the Committee on Agriculture the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. He refused to appoint the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] on the Committee on the Judiciary after Mr. WILLIAMS had recommended him. He refused to appoint the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors after Mr. WILLIAMS had indorsed him. He now says he did this in order to maintain the "geographical parity" on the committees. He did other eccentric things in the make-up of committees on both sides of the House. We submit that question to the candid consideration of the country.

But, Mr. Speaker, we should put aside these small quibblings, and go forward and meet the great issues confronting the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the last analysis it will be found that we will stand for our pledges to the country, and when the gavel falls at the end of the Sixty-second Congress it will be ascertained that we have kept the faith in letter, in spirit, and in substance to the American voters and redeemed every promise we made them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution for the election of the committees of the House.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution to elect the Members named in the places on the committees as designated.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 47.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman means to ask unanimous consent for the passage of that resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution just reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration and adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers the following resolution and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 49.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and during the recess of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I present the following joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration and adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 56) to create and creating a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee be, and hereby is, appointed, consisting of the Senators composing the committee of the Senate on Revision of the Laws of the United States and the members of the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the statutory revision commission heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including all laws of a general nature, permanent in character, passed since the submission to Congress on December 15, 1906, of the final report of said commission, and that the said joint committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary; all such expenses to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida objects.

PRINTING AND BINDING, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 43.

Resolved, That authority is granted to do all printing and binding for the Committee on Appropriations deemed necessary in connection with the subjects considered by said committee during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 42.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or such subcommittee as they may designate, shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the House during the Sixty-second Congress and during the recesses of that Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution just read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING AND BINDING, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 45.

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress is authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary for the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentlemen offering these resolutions that they include everything in one resolution. It is a waste of time to pass two resolutions here, one authorizing printing and binding and the other authorizing such committees to sit.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman as far as I am concerned I am not going to ask anything except the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some of the committees are not asking for that privilege and some should not be given that privilege.

Mr. MANN. That may be, but gentlemen ought not to put in two resolutions; it is a waste of the time of the House when one would accomplish the purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Somebody might object to one and not to the other.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 46.

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 44.

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I also offer a further resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution just read. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if there is immediate necessity for the Committee on the District of Columbia meeting during the sessions of the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that these are exactly the same resolutions that were adopted at the beginning of the last session of Congress and were clipped from the RECORD. There are 25 or 30 bills pending before the committee now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question is whether the Members of the minority who are on the committee will not have their hands so filled with other business that they will not be able to accommodate themselves wholly to the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia should it meet during sessions of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can give no answer to that. But I will say to the gentleman that the committee will be called together and their convenience consulted as to meeting days and time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that the Committee on the District of Columbia is a very busy one, that much local business arises, and that it takes a great deal of the time of the members, both of the majority and the minority, and if there is no real, actual, hurrying necessity for meetings of the committee during the sessions of the House, it would seem to me inadvisable to pass this resolution at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can say to the gentleman that I care nothing in the world about it, as to whether it passes or not. If he is not willing to conduct the business of the committee, nail up the doors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it not be better to let it stand until the necessity arises?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to interject a remark?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] can object all he wants to.

Mr. MANN. I would like to make this suggestion to the gentlemen who are asking leave for their committees to sit during the sessions of the House. I have been a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for a number of years, and have been chairman of it for two years, and during the last two years that committee reported in more than 30 per cent of the bills that finally became laws during the Sixty-first Congress, and yet that committee never asked leave to sit during the sessions of the House. That was one reason why the work it brought before this House always received careful and generous attention on the part of the House. The members of the committee were here on the floor instead of being off in a committee room. They were able to transact the business of the committee in the morning and be in the House during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object for the present.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 38.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 41.

Resolved, That the Committee on War Claims be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 51.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary in the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 53.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Territories be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as shall be necessary for the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 54.

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be, and the same hereby is, authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary for the use of the committee during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 55.

Resolved, That the Committee on Insular Affairs be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 56.

Resolved, That the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic be, and is hereby, authorized to have such printing and binding done as shall be necessary for the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if this same resolution has heretofore been passed by the House?

Mr. CANDLER. It has.

Mr. MANN. Has that committee had the privilege heretofore?

Mr. CANDLER. It has.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 3.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 57.

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3 is hereby authorized during the Sixty-second Congress to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not any notices of contests have come to this House up to this time?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I think so.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am quite certain they have.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to have some definite information.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am so informed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What are they?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There is one from Iowa and one from Maryland. There are several, as I understand.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I am not disposed to make any captious objection, but unless I can get some more information than simply the statement that the gentleman believes that there is a case——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will say to the gentleman that there are several cases.

Mr. HAMILL. There is the Gill case, from Maryland.

Mr. MANN. The business of an Elections Committee can not be conducted without authority to print.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand that; but unless there is some business to transact I do not see how they can do any printing. Will the gentleman from Illinois state what binding they would do? I can understand that they ought to have the right to print stationery, but as to binding, I can not see how they need do that unless there is business.

Mr. MANN. I have served on the committee so long that I can tell the gentleman it is quite necessary to print the briefs, and sometimes necessary to bind them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is in case of contested elections. In the event they do not have any contested elections they can not need any binding.

Mr. MANN. In that case they will not need to have anything printed or bound; but there are some contested-election cases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 40.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands is authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary for the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 50.

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 39.

Resolved, That the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures be authorized to have such printing and binding done as shall be necessary for the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

MANUAL AND DIGEST.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia offers another resolution and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 48.

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies of a manual and digest of the rules and practice of the House of Representatives for the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under the direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This is a resolution to print 2,000 copies of the Manual and Digest.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. It is in the exact words of the resolution adopted in the last Congress.

Mr. MANN. Was that resolution passed without reference to the Printing Committee?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows there is some limitation in the law in regard to these things.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand that. This resolution conforms to the law and the practice as it has been every time.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it the rule and has it been the practice for the Speaker of the House to distribute the Digest?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no. That is not this resolution.

Mr. MADDEN. What does this resolution provide?

Mr. HARDWICK. That the Digest shall be prepared under the direction of the Speaker, and distributed by the Clerk.

Mr. MADDEN. As I understood the reading of the resolution, it provided that the Speaker should distribute.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no. It is to be distributed in the usual way.

Mr. MADDEN. Is this in the usual form?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. In the usual form of resolutions that have been passed before?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. It has been the practice to have these Manuals distributed through the Clerk's document room. Would it not be a good thing to change that practice and have them distributed to the Members through the folding room, and to give each one his proportional share?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDWICK. There would not be any particular objection to it, but it seems to me that these Manuals were intended for the use of the Members alone, and this is a method by which Members can get them.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is true; but this provides for the printing of 2,000 copies, which gives to each Member, if he can get them from the Clerk's document room, a certain number. Now, the gentleman knows, if he has had the experience that a number of Members have, that some Members get more than their share and some get less than their share. The only fair way to distribute these Manuals, which ought to be the property of the Members, is through the folding room.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say that I never have had any trouble myself, and I do not know of any Member on either side that has had any trouble, in getting a sufficient number of Manuals. I can assure the gentleman from Georgia that this distribution will be fair, just, and equitable. It is in exact accordance with the unbroken practice in the past.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Georgia is mistaken about some Members not having trouble in getting all that they desire.

Mr. HARDWICK. I mean all that they were entitled to.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, all that they were entitled to either; the gentleman is mistaken. I do not say that I have had any trouble myself; but I know of Members that have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the resolution ought to be amended so as to distribute these Manuals through the folding room.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] at all. I quite agree with the gentleman from Georgia who introduced the resolution. There are many Members who do not want three or four of these Manuals, and if you distribute them through the folding room they are sent to some one in the country who does not want them. When some Member does want them he can not get them, or else they are left in the folding room until after the Congress adjourns, when they are of no value. If they go to the Clerk's document room, when a Member wants a Manual he can get one as long as they last, and if they run out we will have more printed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me call attention to the fact that under the resolution of the Democratic caucus it is intended to abolish the Clerk's document room.

Mr. MANN. Abolish it theoretically, but there will be some place where documents can be obtained, and with the same expense and doing the same business.

Mr. BARTLETT. I agree with the gentleman. I think a great many things have been suggested to be abolished by the Democratic caucus that is mere theory and which will turn out that way.

Mr. MANN. And which have not been abolished.

Mr. BARTLETT. And which will not be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 65.

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary in the conduct of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 61.

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 72.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary in the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask whether it is usual for the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department to have anything that requires printing to be done?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am advised that there will be. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department expects to have something to do.

Mr. MADDEN. I think I will object for the present, and if they have anything to do they can offer the resolution again.

COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 60.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs have authority to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 68.

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 67.

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and hereby is, authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary for the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 62.

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce shall be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-second Congress to have such printing and binding done as may be required for the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 63.

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be authorized to have such printing and binding done as is necessary in the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 2.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 58.

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 2 be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until I can hear what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will please report the resolution again.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary for the use of said committee during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I do not know that I will in the end—but I would ask the gentleman to let that go over. If these committees are going to work, they will have to have the right. I suppose that will be the case; but as one has gone over, they ought all to be treated alike.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Let it go over without prejudice, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the resolution go over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky will withhold his resolution for a moment, there are some matters on the Speaker's table. The Chair presents a communication from the secretary of state of the State of Colorado announcing the ratification of the income-tax amendment [applause] and orders it to be printed in the RECORD and Journal, and that it lie upon the table.

The communication is as follows:

STATE OF COLORADO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Colorado, ss:

I, James B. Pearce, secretary of state of the State of Colorado, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of senate concurrent resolution No. 3, by Senator Garman, ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, which was filed in this office the 21st day of February, A. D. 1911, at 5.43 o'clock p. m., and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Colorado, at the city of Denver, this 23d day of February, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.]

JAMES B. PEARCE,
Secretary of State.
By THOMAS F. DILLON, Jr.,
Deputy.

Senate concurrent resolution 3—Ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-first Congress of the United States of America, at its first session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution, namely:

"'ARTICLE XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.'"

Therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado.

That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the President of the United States, Secretary of State of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives.

STEPHEN R. FITZGARRALD,
President of the Senate.
GEORGE MCLACHLAN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved this 20th day of February, A. D. 1911.

JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Governor of the State of Colorado.

Filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Colorado on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1911, at 5.43 o'clock p. m.

JAMES B. PEARCE,
Secretary of State.
By THOMAS F. DILLON, Jr.,
Deputy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House the following personal requests:

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia was granted leave of absence from Wednesday, the 12th, until the 22d, inclusive, on account of important business.

By unanimous consent Mr. CURLEY was granted indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent Mr. MITCHELL was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Albert H. Campbell, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent Mr. BARCHFELD was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Edward M. Keating, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent Mr. FOSTER of Illinois was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of James Wiley, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon; also, leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Sarah C. James, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following joint resolution——

EX-REPRESENTATIVE TOM L. JOHNSON.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent, and I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withhold his motion for just a moment, for the immediate consideration of the following resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky had the floor.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to hear the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 52.

Resolved, That the House has heard with regret of the death of the Hon. Tom L. Johnson, of Cleveland, Ohio, a former distinguished Member of this House, and hereby extends its sympathy to his family. In his death the country has lost one of its foremost citizens.

Mr. HOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether there is any precedent for this?

Mr. HOWLAND. I do not know whether there is any precedent for it or not. I think it is a matter in place, and proper at this time.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to this resolution, but if this is to become the fashion—and setting a precedent is liable to cause it to become a fashionable thing—I shall object to the next and succeeding resolutions of this character.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. As I understand it, the gentleman was a Member of this House at one time.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And I think we can well confine it to Members and ex-Members.

Mr. MANN. I think we can well confine it to Members. They all pass away in the course of time, and if it becomes so that it is a slight if the resolution is not offered, then, every time, the friends of a deceased ex-Member will have to see that a resolution is offered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky offers a joint resolution and moves its adoption. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 68) to create a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That a special joint committee be appointed, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the statutory revision commission heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including all laws of a general nature, permanent in character, passed since the submission to Congress on December 15, 1906, of the final report of said commission; and that the said joint commission be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary; all such expenses to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the resolution is not a privileged resolution. However, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want the point of order to be reserved, Mr. Speaker. I simply call the Chair's attention to the fact that there is nothing now in order of a higher privilege, and that in the previous Congress twice the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], then Speaker of the House, held, on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Tawney, that it was in order if nothing of a higher privilege was pending to call up from the floor a resolution of this kind. If the Chair has not the precedents, I can furnish him with a memorandum of them.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to dispose of the point of order, and then I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I reserve a point of order as well.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want it reserved. It has been made.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is the regular order. We have exhausted the regular order——

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, the precedent to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers is a matter of calling up something on the floor of the House which is not contrary to the other rules. It is now in order in the House to demand the regular order, and if the regular order, under the calendar, is exhausted, it is in order to proceed to something else—anything that is before the House. The gentleman from Kentucky the other day would have been correct. Before the rules were adopted he could have demanded the consideration of this resolution.

But the rules provide, Rule XI—

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, viz: Subjects relating—

* * * * * * *

35. To the revision and codification of the Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

And the rules provide that when this resolution be introduced it shall be referred by the Speaker to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. That is regardless of the regular order, regardless of whether it is in order to take the matter up.

If this were a report from a committee, although no committee call was being made and there was nothing else before the House, it would be in order to call up this resolution, it having been reported from the committee, because there is nothing else ahead of it. But the rules require that the resolution, when introduced, shall be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

I would like also to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to this fact, a little aside from the point of order: I asked him when he introduced the resolution the other day—and I assume this is the same resolution—whether it was similar to the resolutions which have heretofore been passed. I understood him to say that it was the same resolution. I afterwards compared the resolution which the gentleman introduced with the resolutions which have heretofore been enacted into law, and there is a very broad difference between them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to be perfectly fair with the gentleman and with the House in that particular. I made that statement on the word of the clerk of the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws, who said that he had followed the exact wording of the previous resolutions. I assumed that to be true. Certainly, there is nothing in this resolution that contemplates doing anything other than the other resolution did.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman will pardon me. Of course the gentleman understands very well that he is the last man in the House that I would think capable of endeavoring to mislead me or mislead the House as to a statement. That goes without saying. However, the resolution which the gentleman introduced provided that there should be appointed a joint committee, while the resolutions which have heretofore passed provided that there should be appointed a joint committee consisting of certain Senators of the Sixty-second Congress and certain Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress, thereby, in effect, as it has been interpreted, limiting the life of the joint committee to the Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, right in that connection I will concede that that is a distinction; but I think the gentleman will find it is the only one. And the reason for that is this, that the other resolutions were offered in the closing days of a Congress and provided that the Speaker of that particular Congress, together with the then existing Vice President, should appoint the joint committee, but in order that the members should be Members of the new Congress it expressly so stated, and named them. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], in the closing days of the last Congress offered the resolution in the form that the gentleman suggested. Manifestly, in the beginning of this Congress it seemed to me improper to designate the personnel of this joint committee. It was a matter that should properly be left both to the Vice President and to the Speaker, and those names were left out.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. The resolution has never designated the names. But let me get the distinction——

Mr. SHERLEY. I see the distinction.

Mr. MANN. Under the resolution as passed, providing that the joint committee should consist of two or three members—whatever their number is—or Representatives in a certain Congress, it was construed to limit the life of the committee to the Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I think we can readily meet the situation. In the event the Chair shall hold the matter to be in order, I will offer in my own time an amendment providing that the joint committee shall be for the life of the Sixty-second Congress only.

Mr. MANN. All right. The resolution offered this morning, providing for a joint committee on the revision of the laws, if adopted would have made the members of that committee members of it as long as they lived.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not responsible for that.

Mr. MANN. It has always been held that where you appoint a joint committee, or something of that sort, without making some limitation upon it, its members continue in office, whether they went out as Members of Congress or not, just like the Monetary Commission, which now consists in the main of ex-Members of Congress who were appointed while they were Members of Congress.

Now, there is no desire, I think, to create a joint commission on the revision of the laws that shall be never ending. We had trouble enough to get rid of one, without creating another permanent one.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. What is the difference between the resolution offered by the gentleman from California and the one offered by the gentleman from Kentucky as to the time that this commission shall end?

Mr. MANN. There is no difference. I was just calling the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to that fact.

Mr. RAKER. What is intended is simply to continue it during the Sixty-second Congress and no further.

Mr. MANN. What is intended by the gentleman and what the men who are appointed on the commission may intend, if they happen to go out of the House, may be very different things. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] proposes, if his resolution is considered, to put in an amendment which will limit it to the life of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I should like to ask the gentleman if the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is not, in effect, a motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. MANN. I think it is a motion to throw the rules to the winds.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And it would require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. MANN. I have suggested that to the Speaker.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit me, I will read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 24, 1909, page 3737:

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the bill H. R. 10933—the census appropriation bill—and move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rules. As the Chair understands it, the gentleman from Minnesota offers the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rules.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill is in the hands of the Appropriation Committee, or, at least, has been referred by the Speaker to the Appropriation Committee; that no report has been made upon it; and that it is not properly before the House, inasmuch as the committee has not been properly discharged from the further consideration of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the bill has not been referred to any committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The Journal does not disclose any record of the bill. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. MACON. Then I make the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Minnesota offers the bill from the floor.

Mr. MACON. I make the point of order that the bill is improperly before the House for the reason that it must be referred to the committee and presented by it to the House under the rules before it can be considered in any other manner than by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Was that the census bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. That was the census bill.

Mr. MANN. We nearly had a great riot here over the census bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the gentleman is speaking of the census apportionment bill, and I am speaking of the census appropriation bill; not the Crumpacker bill, but the bill presented by Mr. Tawney.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but it has always been contended that anything relating to the census was privileged, and undoubtedly that was the contention then.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Speaker did not put it on that ground.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker did not put it on either ground, as I think the gentleman will see.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I should like to ask the gentleman why the necessity of this hurry in the passage of this resolution?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a question that may properly be considered when the matter is up for consideration. In my judgment, I have offered it at a proper time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Has the gentleman any objection to its going to the proper committee and being considered by it?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Kentucky had not thought this was a proper course to take, he would have sent it to a committee.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy Members present, not a quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 12, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 76.

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required for the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk has just read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 75.

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts is hereby authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will let the resolution go over. I would like to say to the gentleman, if I may be permitted, that if he is putting in this resolution for the purpose of having stationery printed for the use of the committee, that it is not necessary to have a resolution of the House to permit a committee to have stationery printed for its use at all. Every committee of the House is entitled, on the requisition or order of the chairman or the clerk, to have stationery printed. While the amount of any one order is limited, several orders a day for different kinds may be put in and followed up by orders the next day under the law.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think it fair for the gentleman from Illinois to assume that this resolution is introduced for the purpose he suggests. It may be that the Committee on Education will try to get busy during this extra session and that we may need some printing and binding, but I am willing to let it go over for the present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when the committee under the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina gets busy, as I hope it will soon, I think they ought to have the privilege of having printing and binding done, but meanwhile I will ask the gentleman to let it go over.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object to this matter. It is usual, it is the custom to do this, and we might as well have it done now as later on in the next session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists on his resolution now, I shall object.

Mr. LEVER. I will withhold the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House and during the recess of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what the reason is for asking this permission?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that, while we do not contemplate making reports during the extra session, there are many legislative matters that the committee will wish to consider, so as to get them out of the congestion of the regular session, when we will have the appropriation bills up.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 79.

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be authorized to have such printing done as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that that committee ought to have the authority to have binding done as well as printing, and I notice his resolution does not include that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department be authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida objects.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 78.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary for the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 80.

Resolved, That the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives is authorized to have such printing and binding done for the use of the committee as may be necessary for the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS, ETC.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to provide for the distribution by Members of the Sixty-second Congress of documents, reports, and other publications.

Resolved, etc., That all documents, books, reports, and other publications ordered to be printed and published by the Sixty-first Congress and not allotted prior to the 4th day of March, 1911, shall be allotted to the Members of the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Florida did object.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 1.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 81.

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 1 be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of business during the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned on yesterday there was pending a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 68) offered by myself to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] had made a point of order. I now ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution offered yesterday and which is now pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to withdraw a resolution which he offered on yesterday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose he has that right without asking unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be withdrawn. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Alabama will withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. H. H. BINGHAM presented himself at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the following letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 11, 1911.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

ESTEEMED SIR: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice and respectfully ask its immediate acceptance.

Very respectfully,
R. B. MACON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MORRISON was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George W. Anderson, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, April 13, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Pilkington Bayou, Tex. (H. Doc. No. 10); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of East Haven River, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 11); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Merrimac River between Haverhill and Lowell, Mass. (H. Doc. No. 9); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 13, 1911.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, whose ear is ever open to the cry of Thy children, we are sore pained because of the homes which have been devastated and the hearts which have been made desolate. Their sorrow is our sorrow, as their loss is our loss. Oh, Thou who rulest over whirlwind and tempest, comfort the stricken hearts, we pray Thee, and deepen Thy children's trust in Thee. And though Thou leadest us in ways which we can not understand, because of the frailty of our nature, help us still, we implore Thee, to pray that Thy will may be done and that Thy kingdom may come. And unto Thee, who art the God of all comfort, do we commit our bodies and our souls now and forevermore. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 43.

Whereas it appears from an investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States, and otherwise, that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States, notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States, and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof by placing the subject under the Federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and control its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the application be made, and hereby is made, to Congress, under the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States, now in session or when next convened, be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or an equivalent resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States and to the several Members of the bodies representing this State therein; also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

Adopted February 16, 1911.

N. BAXTER, Jr.,
Speaker of the Senate.
A. M. LEACH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved, February 17, 1911.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a petition of the Salt Lake Socialist Party, of Salt Lake City, Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation withdrawing the United States troops from the Mexican border, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES. I present a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Washington, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 6.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Washington, would respectfully represent:

The Bay of Port Townsend and Oak Bay, in the State of Washington, are now separated by a narrow strip of land from 100 to 150 feet in width, and by reason of this obstruction vessels going north from Puget Sound are compelled to pass around Marrowstone Point, exposed to the heavy swells direct from the ocean. We would further represent that light-draft and stern-wheel steamers are forbidden by the United States local inspectors from doing business between the city of Port Townsend and other cities on Puget Sound south of Marrowstone Point during the winter months. We would further represent that the removal of this obstruction would present a safe means of communication during the entire year, and also shorten the distance to be traveled by water at least 13 miles, and that said obstruction can be removed for the sum of $80,000.

The number of vessels and tonnage entering from and clearing for foreign ports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, was 5,097, with the total tonnage of 3,816,010. There is no record of vessels in the coastwise trade, as they are not required to enter or clear, but a conservative estimate would place it as nearly double the foreign tonnage, in addition to what we term the "local fleet" of Puget Sound.

Many of the foreign and coastwise vessels would use the canal, if constructed, but its importance for protection of the local sound fleet and the lumber industry is still greater, the facts concerning which are as follows: Seven vessels of the local fleet ply between the upper sound points to Port Townsend and to points by way of Port Townsend. The number of trips made by these vessels annually in both directions were 3,848, with a total tonnage of 2,323,968. During eight months ending August 31, 1910, they carried 73,233 tons of freight for local points. The average for the year would therefore be in excess of 105,000 tons. If the canal was constructed, every one of these vessels would make use of this passage.

There is an annual towage from the Straits direct to upper sound mills of 75,000,000 to 100,000,000 feet of logs, all of which would make use of this canal. It is not an unusual sight to see six or seven tugs with tows of logs from Port Townsend Bay awaiting favorable opportunity to round Marrowstone Point. During time of storm the weather conditions off Marrowstone Point and opposite the entrance to Port Townsend Bay are as bad as can be found outside of Point Wilson, which the Government designated as open ocean.

The protection which this canal would afford to the smaller vessels of Puget Sound and to the lumber industries would, in itself, be sufficient to warrant the expenditure of the money necessary for its excavation and completion.

In the interests of the industries at the head of Port Townsend Bay, such as the Western Steel Corporation plant at Irondale, the plant of the Classon Chemical Co. at Hadlock, and the Washington Mill Co. interests at the same place, this canal is even more necessary, for the constantly increasing business at these points demand a constantly increasing traffic by water, which traffic is handicapped at present not only by bad weather conditions to be found off Marrowstone Point, but by additional distance of over 12 miles, which must be traveled in order to reach these industries.

With this canal completed, traffic between Seattle and other points on Puget Sound and the various points on Port Townsend Bay would be augmented, in that it would be open to smaller vessels than those which are now required, owing to the necessity of passing at times through exceedingly rough and dangerous weather off Marrowstone Point.

We, your petitioners, would therefore respectfully request that an appropriation of said sum of $80,000 be made for the purposes herein stated, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Passed the senate February 28, 1911.

W. H. PAULHAMUS,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house March 4, 1911.

HOWARD D. TAYLOR,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. JONES. I present a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Washington, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled (twelfth regular session), respectfully petition:

That the bill now before Congress providing that appeal may be taken from the decisions rendered by the Secretary of the Interior to the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the District of Columbia be modified, in that appeals from the decisions of the Secretary of the Interior be taken to the circuit court of the United States for the district in which the land under controversy is situated, and that the bill when so amended be enacted into law.

Passed the senate February 9, 1911.

W. H. PAULHAMUS,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house March 4, 1911.

HOWARD D. TAYLOR,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 27.

Whereas the United States Immigration Commission after four years investigation and the expenditure of $1,000,000 has made a 40-volume report to Congress; and

Whereas it is being proposed that the immigration evils from which the Northeastern States are suffering be relieved by diverting and distributing the aliens now crowding into and congesting the slums, sweatshops, and city centers of the Northeast; and

Whereas the Immigration Commission clearly points out that this is the only country with any considerable net foreign immigration, our laws and administrative policy are the weakest of any new country, and that "substantial restriction is demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations," and the illiteracy test is recommended "as the most feasible single method for excluding undesirable immigration: Therefore be it

Resolved by the State Senate of Tennessee (the House concurring), That we hereby memorialize Congress to immediately enact some such illiteracy test as is recommended by the Immigration Commission as is law in Australia, New Zealand, and other new countries, pass other needed immigration legislation along the lines of the Immigration Commission's suggestions, and do not pass any legislation looking to the diversion and distribution of the kind of alien population that is now congesting the northeastern cities and causing so many evils there; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be sent by the Secretary of the Senate at once to the President of the United States, to our two United States Senators, and each of our Representatives at Washington, D. C., with the request that it be presented to Congress and properly referred.

Adopted February 7, 1911.

N. BAXTER, JR.,
Speaker of the Senate.
A. M. LEACH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved, February 9, 1911.

BEN W. HOOPER, Governor.

I, W. D. Scruggs, chief clerk of the senate, hereby certify that this is a true and correct copy of senate joint resolution No. 27, adopted February 7, 1911.

W. D. SCRUGGS,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. TAYLOR presented a petition of Local Branch Sons of the Revolution, of Memphis, Tenn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a compilation for publication of the military and naval records of the Revolutionary War, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN. I have numerous telegrams in the nature of petitions from State associations, county associations, and business associations with reference to a proposed change in tariff schedule K. They are in the nature of requests that a postponement may be had of the consideration of that subject until the Tariff Board has been heard from, with a full report on that industry. It is understood that the Tariff Board is now engaged in investigating woolgrowing and wool manufacturing, have been so engaged for some months, and will be so engaged for some little time to come.

As I do not wish unduly to encumber the RECORD I ask that one from a State association, a very short one, and one from a county association may be printed in the RECORD, and the others simply noted in the RECORD as such petitions are usually noted.

There being no objection, the petitions indicated by Mr. WARREN were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., April 10, 1911.

Hon FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

On behalf of the woolgrowers of Wyoming I vigorously protest against any change being made in schedule K until the National Tariff Commission reports in full. Reciprocal and tariff agitation has caused an irreparable injury to all industries of the West and we demand that our interest be not further unjustly assailed.

J. A. DEFELDER,
President Wyoming Wool Growers Association.

ROCK SPRINGS, WYO., April 10, 1911.

Senator F. E. WARREN,
Washington, D. C.

Forty members of our association trust that you be given renewed strength and vigor to combat successfully any attempt to reduce the tariff on wool. The results of previous experience with tariff reduction even one cent lower than it is now has proved on trial to be insufficient to preserve the sheep industry, and that when the growing of wool cost at least one-fourth less than it does now. We pray that justice may prevail that we may live.

SWEETWATER COUNTY WOOL GROWERS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. WARREN presented memorials of Lewis Barker, Wyoming sheep commissioner, central district; Hon. F. S. King, sheep commissioner, northern district; J. J. Bentley, sheep commissioner, northern district; J. S. Atherly, secretary-treasurer, board of sheep commissioners; Boyer Bros., of Wamsutter; John Piggett, of Lander; Robert Pollock, C. H. Jenkins, George Hartman, Spalding & Soule, Chris Lkine, Joe Lane, James McGibbon Sons, A. W. Augspurgur, A. R. Peters, Flake Hall, Ashley Hall, William Spell, W. W. Bowers, J. D. JOINT COMMITTEE ON REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. GAMBLE. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 5) to create a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides for the appointment of a special joint committee, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President from Members of the Sixty-second Congress, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker from the Members of the Sixty-second Congress, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the Statutory Revision Commission, heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including all laws of a general nature, permanent in character, passed since the submission to Congress, on December 15, 1906, of the final report of said commission; and that the joint committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expenses as may be deemed necessary, all such expense to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL LABORER IN THE STATIONERY ROOM.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the following resolution (S. Res. 8) submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] on the 6th instant:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized to employ an additional laborer in the Senate stationery room at the rate of $720 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for—

to report it favorably, and I call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 13) authorizing the appointment of a commission to adjust and settle certain claims between the United States and the State of North Carolina; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATUE OF THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I introduce a bill, which I ask may be read, and before any disposition is made of it, by reference or otherwise, I desire, with the permission of the Senate, to say a word.

The bill (S. 745) providing for the erection of a statue to Thomas Jefferson at Washington, D. C., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, of the Sixty-second Congress, to select a site on the public grounds in the District of Columbia for a statue of Thomas Jefferson, to cost, complete, not to exceed $100,000; and, to procure plans and designs for the same, to be reported to Congress during its next session, the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate I desire to make a short statement in regard to this matter.

In the Fifty-eighth Congress, in pursuance of an amendment offered by myself, the sundry civil appropriation act contained the following provision:

To enable a commission, which is hereby created, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to select a site on the public grounds in the District of Columbia for a statue of Thomas Jefferson, to cost complete not to exceed $100,000, and to procure plans and designs for the same to be reported to Congress during its next session, $5,000.

The Senate will perceive that the bill which I have introduced this morning is in those identical words, with simply the substitution of the Sixty-second Congress instead of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

The sundry civil appropriation bill of that year was passed with that provision in it, and it passed the House, and was approved by the President and became a law. The subsequent illness of the then Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, and his death a short time thereafter, caused a delay in the execution of that order of Congress, which fact was communicated to Congress in a letter by the then Secretary of State, Mr. ROOT, now a Member of this body. I will read the letter of the then Secretary of State, addressed to the Vice President, Charles W. Fairbanks:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 5, 1906.

SIR: I have been instructed by the commission created by the sundry civil appropriation act, approved April 28, 1904, "to be composed of the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to select a site on the public grounds in the District of Columbia for a statue of Thomas Jefferson * * * and to procure plans and designs, to be reported to Congress during its next session," to report to the Senate that action under the statute has been delayed by the illness and death of the late Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, but that the commission has secured the consent of Mr. Augustus St. Gaudens to make the designs for the proposed statue, which will be prepared as soon as Mr. St. Gaudens's health and previous engagements permit. The designs will be transmitted to Congress without any avoidable delay thereafter.

A similar report has been made to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Respectfully submitted.

ELIHU ROOT, Chairman.

Hon. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
President of the United States Senate.

Mr. President, the ill health of the artist, St. Gaudens, which is spoken of in this communication by the then Secretary of State, continued, and he died without ever having completed his work. For that reason the order of Congress, as embodied in that statute, was not carried out.

When at a subsequent time it was thought to again revive the activities of the commission, with a view to the completion of the work, it was ascertained that under a general provision of law, by reason of the lapse of time, the appropriation had lapsed and was no longer available.

In view of that fact, at the last session of Congress I offered an amendment in the Senate to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, which I have before me, reviving that appropriation. It is as follows:

To carry out and make effective the provision made in the act of April 28, 1904, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government: To enable a commission, which is hereby created, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, to select a site on the public grounds in the District of Columbia for a statue of Thomas Jefferson to cost complete not to exceed $100,000, and to procure plans and designs for the same to be reported to the next Congress, $5,000.

That amendment was referred to the Committee on the Library, by that committee reported back favorably to the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; it was favorably reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and was passed by the Senate at the last session as an amendment to the deficiency bill; and was in the conference afterwards taken out of the bill. That is the present status.

The bill which I have introduced, in view of the fact that we will have no appropriation bills at the present session, is an independent bill, using the same language and making the same provision and the same appropriation as has already thus twice passed this body. I will repeat, it has been before the Appropriations Committee twice. It has passed the Senate twice. It has passed the House once. It has received the approval of the President in the past.

Mr. CULLOM rose.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let me continue before I submit to an interruption.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that this is one man, while his fame is in no manner dependent upon it, to whose memory the Government should erect a statue in this Capital. He was the first President ever inaugurated in Washington. That, however, is a comparatively minor matter. He was the great apostle of a distinct body of governmental science and, in a measure, its author. As such he was the founder of a great political party which has continued without interruption for more than a hundred years. Aside from his great services in other regards during a long and memorable career, his name is indissolubly linked with two of the most important events in the history of the United States. The late Senator Hoar, whom it is always a pleasure for me to quote, once in the Senate said that Thomas Jefferson would forever pass through the halls and corridors of history with the Declaration of Independence in one hand and with the title deeds to the great Louisiana Purchase in the other.

Mr. President, this day is the one hundred and sixty-eighth anniversary of the birth of this great and illustrious man, and in view of that fact and the further fact that it has already been considered by committees and has twice passed this body, I ask that there may be unanimous consent that the bill be now passed to its third reading, and that action may be immediately had upon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the request, but I will call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that in all similar bills providing for the erection of statues on the public grounds, we have excluded the grounds of the Capitol and of the Library of Congress. I ask the Senator if he has any objection to having those words inserted?

Mr. BACON. None whatever; though they were not in the previous enactments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will move an amendment, inserting the words "excluding the Capitol Grounds and the grounds of the Library of Congress." I think it would be a misfortune to invade those grounds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is not yet before the Senate for the consideration of amendments. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what is the status of the bill now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has just been introduced, and unanimous consent is asked for its present consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Has it not been referred to a committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has introduced the bill and has asked unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. BACON. I want to say, with the permission of the Senator, as I do not know that he heard me, that this bill has already been considered——

Mr. LODGE. I have listened attentively to every word the Senator has said.

Mr. BACON. Very well; then I will not repeat.

Mr. LODGE. I was merely going to say, Mr. President, that I entirely approve of the erection of a statue to Jefferson; there ought to have been one erected long ago; but I am also extremely anxious that there should be, and there ought to be, erected in this Capital a statue to another great American statesman who has never had a statue erected to his memory here, and that is Alexander Hamilton. He represented different views on the Constitution than those of Mr. Jefferson, but he did very great work in the organization of the Government. I have introduced a bill for the erection in this city of a statue to Hamilton's memory, which has gone to the Committee on the Library; and it seems to me that it is only reasonable that both bills should take the same course. I have no objection, if my bill can be added to it, to having the bill introduced by the Senator from Georgia passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Massachusetts make no condition of that kind. Let unanimous consent be granted for the consideration of the bill introduced by the Senator from Georgia, and then, so far as I am concerned, a similar unanimous consent may be granted in the case of the bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts providing for the erection of a statue to Alexander Hamilton, but let us not impose a condition upon this unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. I am not imposing any condition at all, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. I want to echo what my friend from Texas says. I will most undoubtedly favor——

Mr. CULLOM. I wanted to say a moment ago, when I interrupted the Senator, that it seemed to me, under the circumstances, that this bill ought to pass without any delay.

Mr. BACON. It has twice passed the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. One moment. I do not wish to object, but I do wish to secure action on the Hamilton bill. If action is taken on this bill, I will then offer the Hamilton bill and ask a similar privilege for that, and I will make no objection to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment suggested by me a moment or two ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "District of Columbia," it is proposed to insert "exclusive of the Capitol Grounds and the grounds of the Library of Congress."

Mr. BACON. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 8) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a statue of Alexander Hamilton in Washington, D. C., and that the joint resolution be now considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Committee on the Library be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the joint resolution be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee of the Library of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the president and secretary of the Alexander Hamilton National Memorial Association are hereby created a commission with power to select a site upon the property belonging to the United States in the city of Washington, other than the Capitol and Library grounds, for the erection of a statue to Alexander Hamilton, and to have charge of the erection of said statue, for which purpose $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary in addition to the funds contributed by the Alexander Hamilton National Memorial Association, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. BACON. With the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts, I suggest an amendment, to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred."

Mr. LODGE. Very well, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 12, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred," so as to read:

For which purpose $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary in addition to the funds contributed by the Alexander Hamilton National Memorial Association, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to state, if he knows, what is the amount of the contribution made by the Alexander Hamilton National Memorial Association, referred to in the joint resolution?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know the amount. The association has no large amount, though it has raised a few thousand dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RAPID CITY, S. DAK.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On Monday, through inadvertence, a bill got mixed up in my papers, and I introduced it. I refer to the bill (S. 363) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Rapid City, in the State of South Dakota. Inasmuch as the last Congress acted upon the matter, I move that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS ALONG ANACOSTIA RIVER.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 15), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia transmitting the second report of Mr. Hugh T. Taggart, special counsel, on the ownership of lands and riparian rights along the Anacostia River, in the District of Columbia, be printed, with accompanying illustrations, as a document.

PRINTING FOR THE DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 17), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That authority is granted to print and bind, for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia, such papers and documents as may be deemed necessary in connection with subjects heretofore considered or to be considered by said committee during the Sixty-second Congress.

HEARINGS BEFORE DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 16), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and that the expense thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO TARIFF BILLS.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following notice:

Notice is given that at the next session of the Senate I will offer a resolution proposing a change in the rules of the Senate as set forth in a copy of the resolution hereto attached:

"Resolved, That there be added as one of the standing rules of the Senate the following, to wit:

"'That no amendment to any bill passed by the House, amending or changing by general application the import duties prescribed by existing law, shall be in order or allowed in the Senate unless such proposed amendment seeks to amend or change a paragraph or item embraced in the schedule or schedules, all or a part of which is sought to be amended or changed by the House bill, or unless such proposed amendment is directly related to the subject matter of the House bill and is germane thereto.'"

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be received and lie on the table.

COTTON SEIZURES.

Mr. PERCY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 14), which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 250 copies of Senate Document No. 23, Forty-third Congress, second session, entitled "Report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

ALASKA COAL-LAND CASES.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to ask that the opinion of the United States judge recently rendered in the Alaska coal-land cases, a copy of which I send to the desk, be printed as a Senate document (S. Doc. 8).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. What is the document, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The opinion of the court in the Alaska coal-land cases.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the first responsible opinion of a United States court on the Alaska coal-land laws.

Mr. BAILEY. What court, Mr. President?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the opinion of Judge Hanford of United States district court for the western district of Washington in the ninth circuit.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a district court opinion and not a circuit court opinion?

Mr. HEYBURN. The judge was sitting in a criminal case.

Mr. BAILEY. Then he was sitting as a district judge?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not attach much importance to an opinion of that kind, but I am not going to offer any objection against printing it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to say to the Senator, knowing the situation intimately, that Judge Hanford is one of our oldest and concededly one of our ablest lawyers on the United States bench. He is a man of long years of experience; he has gone very thoroughly into the question of the relation of coal land to the existing law. No other opinion even approaching it in value has been rendered by any court. Judge Hanford, of course, sits in the circuit court of appeals in the ninth circuit, and his opinion, I think, would commend itself to the Senator from Texas as being worthy of publication.

Mr. BAILEY. Anyway it is worth printing, and I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the order to print is entered.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that next Thursday, after the conclusion of the morning business, I will, with the permission of the Senate, submit some remarks on the initiative and referendum. If the Senate shall not be in session at that time, then I will do so on the first day thereafter when the Senate is in session.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise, Mr. President, to say that it will be impossible to make a report designating the committees of the Senate before some time next week, and for that reason I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

RELATIONS WITH JAPAN AND MEXICO.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, it is proper for me to state at the beginning of the remarks that I shall submit to the Senate upon the subject indicated in the resolution that it is not my purpose in any way to criticize the President in reference to the position that he has taken in connection with the troubles in Mexico. I am satisfied that whatever he does will not only be necessary and proper to be done, but will, in his opinion, be for the best interests of the country. I have arisen simply for the purpose of emphasizing what ought to be familiar to everyone who is acquainted with the institutions of the land, and that is that the doctrine known as the Monroe doctrine is not involved in the Mexican situation in any way whatever. A great many persons of intelligence, and a number of journals ably edited, are falling into the error of supposing that if there should be any disagreement between the United States and Mexico—which we all hope and believe there will not be—that the Monroe doctrine will form the basis of the controversy. I make the assertion that this is not true in any aspect of the case. I do not suppose that there is any subject that has been discussed before Congress to a greater extent than the subject that is designated as "the Monroe doctrine," and I have upon a number of occasions, both in the House and in the Senate, contributed to the literature upon the question, so that I really feel that I ought not to inflict even upon an attentive and patient body any further comments or observations in connection therewith. What I will say, if it serves no other purpose, will at least relieve the public mind of a false impression that is rapidly gaining ground, that whenever there is any controversy between the United States and any other country upon the American continent, the Monroe doctrine immediately and mysteriously springs into existence and calls for our assertion and vindication of the principles that it enunciates.

One proposition I desire to make perfectly plain, and that is that we must not confuse or commingle in any degree the Monroe doctrine with the Roosevelt doctrine. During the reign of ex-President Roosevelt a lot of miscellaneous doctrines were launched upon the tide of time that were all called "The Monroe doctrine," but which, in point of fact, had no possible connection with it and were not related to it in any manner whatever.

The Roosevelt doctrine, properly defined, is the doctrine of the gentleman with the shillalah at Donnybrook Fair, "Whenever you see a head, hit it." The ex-president once upon a time composed a brief treatise upon the Monroe doctrine. This is not the work in which he referred to the men who helped to frame that governmental principle as "shifty doctrinaires, mediocre minds, and imbeciles." The treatise that I refer to is another publication, and it is extremely difficult to procure a copy of it. They seem to have all disappeared, either by the public taking them or owing to the fact that the President himself bought them all up, and thus withdrew them from public inspection. It is a treatise that the ex-President need not be ashamed of in any way, because he was writing about a subject that he knew all about, which was not always the case with reference to numerous other subjects to which he has upon a great many occasions devoted his great talents and ability. A few years ago, and long after this book was written, Mr. Roosevelt announced his new doctrine that I have referred to, and which at the time provoked the criticism of every lawyer at the American bar who was at all conversant with the principles of international law and amazed every statesman and diplomatic official in the civilized world. His doctrine was that in the event that any of the States upon the American Continent refused, either from wantonness or inability, to perform their contractual obligations, that foreign nations, protecting their citizens who were creditors, could enforce the payment of those obligations through the instrumentality of war.

When I came to the Senate this new doctrine struck me with such appalling terror that I could not resist the opportunity of endeavoring to controvert it to the best of my ability in an address delivered to this body. The inference that the ex-President drew, in a message that he sent to the Senate, was in connection with the affairs of Santo Domingo, and he boldly and unhesitatingly proclaimed that if Santo Domingo failed to pay her debts the Governments of Holland and of Belgium, representing their citizens who were creditors, might collect those debts through the process of war, and that therefore the Monroe doctrine came into immediate operation, and the imperative duty devolved upon us to seize the custom receipts of Santo Domingo and divide them among her creditors in order to prevent the capture and occupation of her territory by foreign nations. I venture to say that a more grotesque interpretation of the Monroe doctrine was never incorporated in any message that ever issued from the Executive chamber.

In pursuance of this mad policy—which if there had been a spark of life left in the bodies of Jefferson, or of Adams, or Monroe, would have made them tremble in their graves—Mr. Roosevelt proceeded to carry it into execution, and after he had taken possession of the customhouses of Santo Domingo and had collected their revenues and deposited them in a financial institution in New York, he gave the Senate the privilege of maintaining what he was pleased to call "the status quo" between the United States and Santo Domingo.

Mr. President, such a status quo never existed upon all the pages of civilized or uncivilized history. I will not do myself the credit of claiming that my remarks at that time—during the course of which I cited an unbroken line of diplomatic and international precedents against the proposition contained in the message—had any influence whatever in making the ex-President modify the message a week or so afterwards, in which he denied that he ever meant to say that the failure to pay contractual debts was a justification for war. Of course, my contention was that the right to commence hostilities against a country never existed in a case of this sort, but was limited to cases where an unjustifiable trespass or tort was committed against persons who were citizens of the complaining Government, or where they were in some way deprived of their liberties or international rights, and the Government that had committed the crime persistently refused to make reparation therefor or was in such a condition that reparation could not be obtained at the hands of its judicial system.

Let us look for a moment at what sort of wars we would have if the Roosevelt construction of the Monroe doctrine was to prevail and was to be incorporated into our diplomatic code. We would have an interminable succession of bondholders and stock-market wars. War, instead of being declared by Congress, could be practically declared by the banking syndicates of London, Paris, Amsterdam, and Berlin, represented by their financial agents in America, and we would become sponsors and guarantors for every bankrupt and impoverished government in Central or South America. We have never yet been informed as to what amount of money was made out of the Santo Domingo settlement nor what was the price at which their bonds were sold before our intervention, and what was the price that the holders afterwards obtained for them in settlement of their claims, nor who was in the deal, nor who were the beneficiaries of our interference.

I would like to ask, in this connection, what right have any of our citizens to engage in enterprises in these countries, charge them the most exorbitant and extortionate prices for the construction of public works, and then demand of the United States that it must nominate itself as a receiver over the revenues of the government that they have practically driven into bankruptcy and liquidate its indebtedness? Where is there an intelligent person in the United States, who has studied the history and institutions of the country, who can draw the slighest parallel between this doctrine, first proclaimed by Mr. Roosevelt, and the doctrine that bears the name of Monroe, sustained by the names of Jefferson and of Madison and of Adams? The despots of Austria and of Russia and of Prussia, when they formed the Holy Alliance, whatever else may be said of them, were not mercenaries or hirelings. When they met at Aix la Chappelle and Laybach in conference they had but one object in view and that was to put an end to the system of representative government throughout the world, to destroy the liberty of the press, and to maintain the jure divino autocracies of Europe, and when Mr. Monroe wrote to Jefferson submitting the British proposals of Mr. Canning, and when Jefferson, on October 24, 1823, answered from Monticello:

> The question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a Nation. This sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us.

Did he in his prophetic mind have the remotest conception that this great charter of republican liberty which he was helping to frame was to be used by buccaneers and speculators and adventurers to oppress the commercial liberties of the very States whose personal liberties it was supposed to guarantee? I will not sit here in silence, with folded arms, and permit this revolutionary principle which was formulated and promulgated overnight by Mr. Roosevelt to be known by any other name except the name of the illustrious individual who first conceived it and put it into practical execution. I want to lift this cloud from around the brow of the rising generation. I want the students at our colleges and universities to understand that when they are discussing this proposition they are not discussing the Monroe doctrine or any corollary that flows from it in any manner whatever. They are simply discussing a doctrine that has received practical recognition at the purlieus of American brokers and speculators who deal in South and Central American securities and at the gambling dens of Amsterdam bankers and foreign stock markets, and it is a disgrace and a degradation to connect this money-making enterprise with the imperishable names that in tones that rang and reechoed throughout the world pledged forever the honor of this Republic to maintain the blessings of liberty in every quarter and section of the Western Continent where despotism had ceased to hold its sway.

We might let Mr. Roosevelt's doctrine rest where it is were it not for the fact that the ex-President has set some of the schools of this country almost deranged upon the subject. He has perverted the history of the Nation to such an extent that every day in the year, in answer to innocent communications that I receive, I am using my best efforts to relieve these young minds of the false impressions and confusion with which he has surrounded them. It is impossible for me to dictate letters to all of the attendants at all of the schools in the United States telling them not to pay any attention to this new doctrine of the ex-President, and it is principally for this reason that I have arisen here to-day that I may say a few words that may possibly reach some of the victims whose future ambition he has imperiled by his heretic utterances upon the subject.

Let me read a few communications out of the many that I am receiving from some of these young men, for the purpose of illustrating the havoc and ruin that he has caused among the tender disciples of his school. Here is one of the letters:

Will you please tell me what stand, in your opinion, ex-President Roosevelt would take upon this Mexican question if he had a hand in it? I am in a debate upon the subject, and I would like to have any of his speeches that you can send me. I will try to work my way out of it if I can just find out how he stands and how you stand. I am so fond of reading his speeches and yours. They have the true ring in them, and they are very much alike.

Poor boy. He really thought he was paying me a compliment. I read a second communication:

Will you explain to me what connection the Monroe doctrine has with the case in Mexico? I have read Mr. Roosevelt's message on Santo Domingo, but I am mixed up about it—

No wonder.

What I would like to know is this: Suppose the Mexican people would turn their Government into a monarchy, would we have a right to interfere?

This communication came just in time, and the question was a very intelligent and pertinent one. I sent this boy an observation of Mr. Dana's in a note to Wheaton, which happened to be in direct response to his inquiry. As it is only a few lines and covers the exact point that I am discussing here to-day, I will read the extract:

It has sometimes been assumed that the Monroe doctrine contained some declarations against any other than the democratic-republican institutions of this continent, however arising or introduced. The message will be searched in vain for anything of the kind. We were the first to recognize the imperial authority of Dom Pedro in Brazil and of Iturbide in Mexico; and more than half of the northern continent was under the scepters of Great Britain and Russia; and those dependencies would certainly be free to adopt what institutions they pleased in case of successful rebellion or of peaceful separation from their parent states.

The third, and last, communication that I will read is as follows:

We have the Mexican question up for debate next week. I would like to know how does the Monroe doctrine get into it?

So would I.

Did Mr. Roosevelt pass any laws of Congress, when he was President, on the subject? I would like to have your private opinion on the following question: If Mr. Roosevelt was in charge of Mexico, what do you think he would do with the United States? I am on the affirmative.

Then there is a postscript, as follows:

Please send me Senator HEYBURN'S speech in which he said that the people who were in favor of electing United States Senators by the people could not spell his name, and most of them could not spell their own names. Also let me have Senator BOURNE'S speech, and kindly let me know whether Mr. Roosevelt is a member of the new party that is now being made up.

I have selected these few communications from among hundreds of similar ones to show how students who are trying to familiarize themselves with the political history of the country have had their minds perverted and prostrated upon some of the great and imperishable principles that underlie our institutions. I want now to announce to them in such unambiguous terms that they can not be misunderstood, and which will perhaps obviate the necessity of my answering a number of communications in the future, that our present movement or maneuvers in reference to Mexico have not the slightest relation to or bearing upon the Monroe doctrine. I will again give them an extract from President Monroe's message, from which the doctrine receives its name, which practically carries the entire subject with it:

In the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. * * * We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the Governments who have declared their independence and maintain it and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

On March 25, 1825, Mr. Clay, who was then Secretary of State, transmitted to our minister at Mexico a communication, from which I quote the following lines:

The political systems of the two continents are essentially different. Each has an exclusive right to judge for itself what is best suited to its own condition and most likely to promote its happiness, but neither has a right to enforce upon the other the establishment of its peculiar system, and you will therefore urge upon the Government of Mexico the utility and expediency of asserting this principle on every proper occasion.

On October 21, 1858, Mr. Cass, Secretary of State, sent to our minister at Spain a communication, from which I will also quote a few lines, as follows:

With respect to the causes of war between Spain and Mexico the United States have no concern and do not undertake to judge them. Nor do they claim to interpose in any hostility which may take place. Their policy of observation and interference is limited to the permanent subjugation of any portion of the territory of Mexico, or of any other American state, to any European power whatever. The American minister is authorized to say that the United States considered Mexico's freedom from foreign control to be essential to the true policy of the independent states of America, and that any attempt to subdue or hold possession of that country would be considered by the United States as an unfriendly act and would be firmly opposed by them.

We all know what occurred with Mexico a little later on; and while I do not at all depend upon our action in that controversy as a precedent for what we ought to do if a similar occasion and emergency presented itself to-day, I want to read only a few lines of an instruction sent by Mr. Cass to Mr. Robert M. McLane, who was then our minister to Mexico:

While we do not deny the right of any other power to carry on hostile operation against Mexico for the redress of its grievances, we firmly object to its holding possession of any part of that country or endeavoring by force to control its political destiny. This opposition to foreign interference is known to France, England, and Spain, as well as the determination of the United States to resist any such attempt by all the means in their power.

And I will close references upon this point by reading a resolution passed by the House of Representatives, without dissent, on April 4, 1864, as follows:

That the Congress of the United States are unwilling by silence to have the nations of the world under the impression that they are indifferent spectators of the deplorable events now transpiring in the Republic of Mexico, and they think fit to declare that it does not accord with the policy of the United States to acknowledge any monarchical government erected on the ruins of any republican government in America under the auspices of any European power.

Now, while volumes have been written upon the subject that I have been discussing, I have read a sufficient number of extracts to satisfy anyone who has a grain of sense or intelligence in these United States of America that whatever the Mexican situation may be, the Monroe doctrine, as such—whatever the Roosevelt doctrine may be—does not at any point come in touch or contact with it, and that there is not now the remotest danger—and there never will be, in my judgment—that any government on this earth will ever attempt to subvert the Republic of Mexico and upon her ruins erect monarchical institutions.

It is said, however, that the property of American citizens may be in jeopardy and in danger in the Republic of Mexico, and that they are entitled to the protection of the United States. In explanation of this suggestion, I would state that the Department of State, presided over by the Secretary of State, and not the Department of War, presided over by the Secretary of War, has jurisdiction and supervision over this matter. The State Department has adopted certain regulations upon this subject, and which are in the hands of our diplomatic officials, which must be strictly followed whenever a claim of a citizen of the United States for redress or indemnity may be diplomatically presented to a foreign government.

The Army of the United States is not an agency for the collection of private debts. I have no greater right, if I were a citizen of the United States living in Mexico, to call upon the Army of the United States to collect a claim either for redress or indemnity against the Government of Mexico than I would have a right to call upon the Militia of the State of Maryland to collect a sum of money that may be due me by the State upon public obligations. I am sure this is the opinion of the President. If any syndicate of mine owners, or any rubber companies, or Standard Oil interests should at any time suffer any injury to their possessions or acquisitions, they have no greater rights than the humblest individual whose property has been injured or destroyed.

And I want, in this very connection, to quote a few lines from a communication of Mr. Seward to our minister at Colombia upon this subject, sent to him in April, 1866. In this communication Mr. Seward says:

We are unfortunately too familiar with the complaints of the delay and the inefficiency of the courts in the South American Republics. We must, however, continue to repose confidence in their independence and integrity, or we must take the broad ground that these States are like those of oriental semicivilized countries—outside the pale within which the law of nations, as generally accepted by Christendom, is understood to govern. The people who go to these regions and encounter great risks in the hope of getting rewards must be regarded as taking all the circumstances into consideration, and can not with reason ask their government to complain that they stand on a common footing with native subjects in respect to the alleged wants of an able, prompt, and conscientious judiciary. We have not undertaken to supervise the arrangements of the whole world for litigation because American citizens voluntarily expose themselves to be concerned in their deficiencies.

Of course, Mr. President, I know full well that if the liberty or the personal rights of our citizens in Mexico or anywhere else are interfered with, or their property wantonly destroyed at the hands of revolutionists or other forces, and the government in which the trouble occurs is either unwilling to protect them or has not the power to do so, that we need not stand idly by, but that we have the right, and it is our duty, to resort to various methods plainly recognized by the usages of international law for the purpose of affording proper protection to the rights of our citizens.

I come now, briefly, to a subject in connection with my remarks that is of great interest to us, and that is the relation between the United States and Japan, that seems to have been brought into prominence by the Mexican situation.

I want to premise what I propose to say upon this subject by the statement that it is my own positive conviction that there is no danger, presently or remotely, of any war between Japan and the United States. The United States certainly has no idea of even preparing the way for hostilities against Japan because there is no cause for such a procedure, and Japan has no grievance against or controversy with the United States that can not be amicably settled upon the field of peace. It is true that Japan might take certain steps with Mexico that would arouse our suspicion and perhaps furnish cause for investigation. I am not an idealist or visionary in matters of this sort. But why these countries should go to war it is impossible for any one to understand outside of military circles and inflammatory journalists. What is the casus belli? The immigration question or the school question in San Francisco? It is too absurd to contemplate that such a proposition that can be settled by treaty and the good sense of the American people should ever become the occasion for war. It is, however, boldly proclaimed that Japan wants to control the Pacific Ocean from Capricorn to Cancer, and in time of war hold it against the world. How absolutely ludicrous is this proposition! I know the spirit of the Japanese people pretty well, and when I speak of the people of either country I am not speaking of the mob, but of the intelligence and patriotism of their representative elements.

The people of Japan constitute a marvelous and courageous race. They have lately concluded a war in which they were animated with a spirit of lofty heroism and daring valor and ambitious sacrifice hardly paralleled upon all the pages of history, and they emerged from this war victorious in every battle upon the land and on the sea. I am willing to admit that if Japan is entering into negotiations for coaling stations and bases for naval supplies for military purposes with Mexico that we are entitled to know what these negotiations are. Congress is, however, without any information or evidence upon the subject. This country would not ordinarily be entitled to know the secret treaties or alliances that other countries may make, but upon the part of Mexico we would unquestionably be entitled to an explanation.

I have no fear that history will repeat itself, or that any Government would attempt to imitate the example of Napoleon III, who thr ugh false pretenses and subterfuges sent an Austrian archduke to a Mexican throne simply to abandon him afterwards to despair and death.

It is also stated that the situation at Guam is threatening and gives evidence of an intention on the part of Japan to prepare for hostilities. Guam is one of our princely volcanic possessions in the Pacific bequeathed to us by the Spanish War. It is one of the Ladrone Islands, or "islands of thieves," thus named because when they were discovered the art of stealing from each other was the principal industry and delightful occupation of their inhabitants. Guam is about 5,000 miles west of San Francisco and about 1,342 miles from Yokohama. It was brought into captivity as a maritime prize by the American cruiser Charleston, which, with a single shot, leveled its formidable battlements and took possession of this volcanic eruption in the name of the United States. The old Spanish governor, who had been there from time immemorial, was under the impression that the Americans were saluting him and appeared upon the deck of the ship to tender his apologies for not having any powder with which to return the compliment. He never discovered the terrible state of affairs until the Spanish colors were lowered from the parapet and the colors of the Union floated in triumph over this priceless gem of the sea.

Guam is a charming spot, and one of the most lustrous and brilliant jewels in our oriental galaxy. Its principal products are vipers, snakes, lizards, wild swine, rats, and castor oil, and if the island were put up at auction to-day, with all of the inhabitants in it, beyond its value as a military post, it would not bring a dollar and a half in any of the markets of the world. It must not be lost sight of, however, that Guam is the key to communication upon the Pacific Ocean and the relay point for cables to Manila, Tokio, and San Francisco. It is necessary to relay messages to Guam, because of the resistance which the submarine current encounters in its journey from Honolulu, and if Japan ever came into possession of Guam we could be cut off from communication with the Philippines, except by way of the Azores and the Suez route, and thence to the Indian Ocean.

So far as I am concerned, I would not care, if we could bring our own citizens home, whether we would be cut off to all eternity from any further communication with the Philippines. I would have permitted them to go long ago. Those of her inhabitants who are civilized, I would permit them to remain civilized; those who are uncivilized, I would permit them to remain uncivilized. Perhaps they are happier when they are uncivilized than when they are civilized. I do not believe this Government is an institution for the feeble-minded nations of the earth.

I shall not refer to the dreadful mistake we made in reference to the Philippines. All the pages of history, ancient, medieval, and modern, do not record such a stupid and stupendous blunder. It is said that Japan wanted these islands. Never on the face of the earth in the way that we wanted them. What Japan might have desired was what we ought to have been satisfied with, and that is a military base for war vessels and naval supplies and for coaling stations, and what we ought to have done was to have made the terms for such an occupation and then sailed away in triumph, satisfied with the victory we had won. Does anyone believe that Japan would have burdened herself with the government of the entire Philippine group or would have been willing to incur the outlay necessary for that purpose? Our victory has been turned into a policy of disaster and sacrifice. It is said that we can not part with them now. Why not? Could we not reserve sufficient space upon this territory to give us a landing place for this great war that is looming up upon the horizon and illuminating the waters of the Pacific and the lurid imagination of some of our great sea captains who, if this war is not hastened, may be upon the retired list before they will be afforded an opportunity of practicing their profession upon their fellow man? The only person that I know of who will perhaps object to this arrangement is the Sultan of Sulu, who is our principal subject in the Orient. It will be a national calamity for us to lose this loyal liegeman. He might some day be a Senator of the United States; in fact, I think he ought to be one now. The question is whether he would be willing to exchange his gilded manacles and his salary for liberty. It is true that we have civilized him to some extent. When he became our captive he was a very pious and devout person, who spent all day Thursday praying in the mosque and the balance of the week he devoted to piracy, murder, and other gentle and respectable amusements. He was then in possession of three kinds of wives—the first-class ones lived in his palace, the second schedule abided with their mother-in-law, and the third, indulging in a fluid decoction that forms one of the delightful beverages of that charming region, spent most of their festive and hilarious hours in jail.

Mr. President, I shall be glad when we can ring down the curtain upon this comedy and tragedy and when the whole performance shall end and this Government shall divest itself of a possession that has been a curse and affliction to us from the day that we tasted this forbidden fruit.

As it is, I suppose we must defend the Philippines as a matter of sentiment, and therefore it is of some importance to us to find out whether the Government of Japan has undertaken to lay its own cable to Guam, because if it did so it simply had no right to take this step without our consent. The law of submarine cables between foreign Governments and the United States has been well established, and I desire to read just a few lines, to show what the law is upon the subject. On May 11, 1897, there was an application by "The French Company of Telegraphic Cables" for permission to lay a cable between Brest and Cape Cod, and in answer to this request the State Department replied as follows:

> It is the expectation of the Federal Government that the French cable company will take no steps toward laying its proposed cable from Cape Cod without express authorization of the President or of Congress, before which a bill was introduced which has not yet been enacted into law. If that company should, however, take action in the manner proposed, it is proper to say that it would do so at its peril.

And the Attorney General, sustaining the State Department, decided—

> That the President has the power, in the absence of legislative enactment, to control the landing of foreign submarine cables. He may either prevent the landing or permit it, if the rights entrusted to his care so demand or permit it. If a landing has been effected without the consent or against the protest of this Government, respect for its rights and compliance with its terms may be enforced by applying the prohibition to the operation of the line unless the necessary conditions are accepted and observed.

Under the usages and principles of international law Japan would clearly have no right to lay a cable to Guam or to any other possession or territory of the United States without our consent. I do not believe that Japan has been guilty of this act, because its advisers and counsellors are men who are too well informed upon the principles of international usages to permit such an intrusion and violation to occur.

I am therefore of the opinion, from what I have said, that there will be no war—no war with Japan, no war with Mexico, and no war with any other nation that I know of. Of course, agitation will create uneasiness and alarm. Before the commencement of the Spanish War the proprietor of one of the most prominent newspapers in this country received a message from his correspondent in Cuba, "There will be no war." He telegraphed back to his representative, "You furnish the news, and I will furnish the war." There was cause, however, for the Spanish War. That war had to come, and Spain had to be driven from the shores of the Western Continent.

I have observed within the last few days that the German Chancellor in the Reichstag, following his earlier utterances upon the same subject, gave expression to this sentiment in connection with the general subject of peace and war that I have been discussing to-day. He said that—

> The difficulty in a disarmament agreement is the impossibility of supervision of individual States. The control over these I regard as absolutely impracticable. The mere attempt to control would have no other result than continual mutual distrust and universal turmoil. It will remain true that the weak will be the prey of the strong. If any nation feels that it is unable longer to spend certain sums for defensive purposes, it will inevitably drop to the second rank. There will always be a strong one ready to take its place. General disarmament is an unsolvable problem as long as men are men.

I would change this by saying that "general disarmament is an unsolvable problem as long as men are savages." Of course Germany is a great military power, and its history has been one of war and conflict and strife, and its people, besides their historic deeds of valor, are intellectually and morally as great a race as there is on earth, either in the arts of war or in the arts of peace, and this sentiment of the chancellor would, I apprehend, have met with universal recognition during all the centuries, from the time the Cimbri and the Teutons came out of their northern forests to ravage the fields of Italy until the time that the German hosts made their triumphant entry upon the streets of Paris. I doubt, however, whether this declaration at this hour meets with the approval of a vast number of the Emperor's subjects, and I know it does not reflect the wishes and the hopes of an advanced civilization. Of course there can not be a general disarmament if Germany declines to enter the list. I believe, however, the day is bound to come when Germany will yield if all the races of the civilized world consent to the adoption of such a policy and the action taken in the Reichstag gives promise in that direction.

I believe the time will come when war will no longer be indulged in, but will only be read of as one of the crimes of a barbarous age. Nations can be civilized in some respects and barbarians in others. History affords us numerous examples of this sort, and while we are gradually becoming more and more enlightened and advanced, we still cling to this brutal method of adjusting our differences. If an individual offers an insult to another, no matter how atrocious it may be, and the insulted party calls for a retraction, which is refused, and then declares war upon the offender and punishes him in fair and open combat, it is an offense that society condemns, and it inflicts its penalties lightly or severely, according to the degree of injury sustained; but if a nation—that is to say, a multitude of individuals—offers an indignity, no matter how slight it is, to another nation and does not make reparation therefor, the nation that is offended, according to our present code of international morals, has the right to open hostilities, and slaughter and violence upon the enemy are not only justified, but become acts that every true patriot who loves his country should take a hand in and be proud of, as a heritage to transmit to his descendants. If two individuals enter into a contract and afterwards disagree about its proper interpretation, we have appointed tribunals to settle the controversy between them, and it would be rather a novel sight to witness one of them attempting to enforce his construction of the agreement upon the other at the point of the bayonet; but if two enlightened, God-fearing governments enter into a treaty and the one should happen, according to the judgment of the other, to violate it, society has concluded that the only cure is to sacrifice human life and to keep on sacrificing it until one party or the other, through sheer exhaustion of its resources and vital energies, is compelled to admit that it has made an error in its version of the compact. If an individual happens to appropriate property that belongs to another, we have ordained a method by which the wrong can be speedily redressed; but if a great nation, by a stroke of diplomacy or statesmanship, as it is called, steals a country thousands of miles away from its borders, that some other nation claims to have stolen years before, there is nothing except bloodshed that can determine who is the lawful thief, and in the settlement of this contention it is highly proper and commendable for both sides to massacre and exterminate the unfortunate natives whom Providence has planted there as the rightful possessors of the disputed territory.

Of course, under existing conditions it may be proper, Mr. President, in time of peace to prepare for war. A number of intelligent persons are of the impression that ex-President Roosevelt was the first one who ever gave this advice. They forget that Washington, in his address to both Houses of Congress in 1790, said:

> To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.

It was perfectly proper to give this advice at that time. Washington, however, was not the first one who made this suggestion. Upon the armories of Venice there is this inscription:

> Happy is that State which in time of peace thinks of war.

Long before this, in the Satires of Horace, there is found the expression:

> In peace a wise man should make suitable provision for war.

This barbarian motto, therefore, is not original with Mr. Roosevelt. I would like to reverse it. Instead of saying, "In time of peace prepare for war," I would say, "In time of threatened war prepare for peace."

Speaking for myself, I am for peace and not for war. I believe the time is approaching when the science of war and standing armies, and navies patrolling the waters of the world, and death-dealing projectiles, and human sacrifice, and cities ruined and fertile plains made barren by the marauder's torch will rank among the dark deeds of the past. I look for the advent of that day and feel with all my fervent hopes and aspirations that it can not be long delayed. "Man's inhumanity to man" has made the "countless thousands mourn," and broken hearts and homes made desolate and agony and anguish and despair can not forever plead in vain. This inhuman and sanguinary method of settling international controversies must cease, and murder, though clad in martial pomp, must call a halt. Nations must no longer be brutes and savages, and the worshiping world must realize that it is profaning the altars of its faith when it not only sanctions but commends and exalts and participates in the practice of a policy which, heading the whole calendar of crimes and embracing every single one of them, is "an utter mockery of religion's holiest offices and bids defiance to the providence of God."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I want merely to say a word in support of the view which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has given us in regard to the Japanese in connection with the difficulties now existing in Mexico. I have examined with some care the correspondence, which, of course, it would not be proper to make public at this time, relating to affairs in Mexico for the last few months. I have been unable to discover in any letter from our ambassador or any of our consuls the slightest allusion or suggestion of any Japanese interference or appearance in Mexico. So far as I am able to judge, all that has been published and republished on that subject in the newspaper press is a fabrication, for what object I shall not undertake to determine. Some strong force is behind it—some great interest, perhaps, or some country—but that the matter is a fabrication I have no doubt.

Our relations with Japan are very friendly. We have just concluded a treaty which has been gratifying to both countries. The attitude of Japan in regard to Mexico has been entirely correct, so far as I am aware, and I wanted to take this opportunity, in support of what the Senator from Maryland has said, simply to make this brief statement in regard to the relation of Japan to the present difficulties in Mexico.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I want to say a word in confirmation of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I also have looked into the question of the alleged interference of the Japanese Government, and, so far as I can learn, there is not a scintilla of truth in it.

RETURN OF STATE BONDS—CORRECTION OF RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I notice, Mr. President, that in the RECORD of March 4, 1911, the following appears under the heading "Return of State bonds":

> Mr. FOSTER. I call up the bill (S. 7180) authorizing the Secretary of War to return to the governor of Louisiana certain bonds of the State of Louisiana and city of New Orleans, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, that is an error, so far as the mention of my name in connection therewith is concerned. I know nothing about the bill; I did not object to it; and if objection was made it must have been made by some other Senator than myself, and the reference to me must be an error of the stenographer or clerk who made up the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Without objection, the RECORD will be corrected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suppose it is too late to correct the RECORD in that respect, as it appears to have been bound. If, however, it is possible to correct the permanent RECORD, I should like to have it done; or, if not, at any rate I should like this statement of mine to go into the RECORD, as of course it will.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I objected. So objection was made, and it is merely a question as to who made it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, with reference to the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I wish to say that upon the day mentioned in the RECORD I did call up the bill and ask unanimous consent for its consideration, and objection was made. The objection, however, was not made by the Senator from Connecticut, who has just spoken, but the objection was made by his former colleague, Mr. Bulkeley.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 17, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 13, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. KAHN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Francis M. Comba, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. GREENE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William S. Green, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 4412) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second times and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. 3), ordered to be printed.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have consent to file the views of the minority (H. Rept. 3, pt. 2) on the bill just reported.

The SPEAKER. How long a time does the gentleman ask?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I agreed with the gentleman from Pennsylvania this morning that he should have unanimous consent to file the views of the minority any time up to the time the bill is disposed of in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call.

When the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress was called:

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress I desire to call up House joint resolution 39, proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 39) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of the first paragraph of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, and in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election, as the legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution."

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] what arrangement he is willing to make as to time to debate this most important question?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes, sir. I presume it is on the same question.

Mr. MANN. I would ask the gentleman if he would not be willing to let this matter go over for a day or two. There will be plenty of opportunity to take it up. The gentleman knows that one resolution was reported into the House on this subject at the last session, and the gentleman himself introduced a resolution on the first day of the session. Now another resolution is reported in. All of these differ. Inasmuch as this is a proposed amendment to the Constitution, it seems to me that we ought to have full opportunity to consider the verbiage of it, at least.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, answering first the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG], I say that, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to agree on a reasonable time for debate.

In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], while it is true, Mr. Speaker, that various resolutions, all looking in the same direction, have from time to time been introduced and from time to time have passed the House, it seems to me that there is no reason for delaying this matter, because if the Representatives here have convictions on any great public question, they have them on this.

Mr. MANN. But, if the gentleman will pardon me, I do not ask for delay so far as the general principle is concerned and is involved, and would not do so. Members are prepared to vote upon that. But as to the language which is to be employed in amending the Constitution, where different language may be subject to different constructions, it seems to me that the House ought to be given full opportunity for consideration. I will suggest to the gentleman that there are some provisions in the joint resolution as reported which seem to me susceptible of different constructions. I think the gentleman himself would desire to have it perfectly clear and beyond question.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the trouble about it is, I say, in answer to the gentleman, there are some people in the United States who want to be so perfectly clear about every question pertaining to this great and important piece of legislation that it is almost impossible to reach a time when we will have absolute unanimity of agreement, and therefore I think we ought to proceed to-day.

Mr. MANN. That is true, but ought not we to have a fair opportunity to make suggestions in reference to it in time to consider these suggestions?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will try to secure all the time necessary or desired for deliberate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. You can not do that unless you give us time to examine it.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will give ample time to debate it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, there is nobody over here who can hear a word that is said by the gentlemen who have the floor.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will cease conversation so that the Members can hear this discussion. The Chair would like to hear it himself.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not see why any Member of the House is not just as much interested in the discussion as the Members who have the floor.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will keep still there will be no difficulty in hearing.

Mr. MADDEN. I can hear as well as any other Member of the House. If the gentleman who has the floor will raise his voice high enough, all the Members can hear.

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman is already sustained. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire when this bill was introduced?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced on the 4th day of April, 1911. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for his information.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that the resolution was introduced on the 4th day of April. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman's resolution was not introduced on the 4th day of April. He introduced a resolution on the 4th day of April on this subject, but that resolution is not the one that was reported to the House.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. When was the resolution reported?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yesterday.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Missouri will permit, I would like to say a word about the parliamentary situation.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman for a question with reference to the division of time. If gentlemen will indicate how much time is desired for debate on that side, we will try to give it to them.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks the House has had a fair opportunity to become acquainted with this measure, in view of the fact that the committee which reported it was appointed only day before yesterday in the afternoon, and that only late that evening were the notices sent out for the committee meeting.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech. I yielded to him for a question.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am asking a question which contains but one sentence. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will answer it.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. The notices were sent out that night and did not reach the Republican members of the committee until after this meeting was held, with but one exception.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The call for a meeting of the committee was sent out in ample time. And not only that, but the notice reached every gentleman's office and was on his desk, and if gentlemen did not go to their offices until after the committee's meeting, it is no fault of mine.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I have not made any reflection on the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I do not see what else it can be.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. But those notices reached nobody, because nobody expected them. This is a resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States, and nobody has had opportunity to study it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield further to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. For a question of one sentence. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I will ask the gentleman when the report was printed and ready for distribution in this case?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The Clerk can inform the gentleman. I do not know.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I ask if it was not within the last 30 minutes?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. It is likely so. Now, Mr. Speaker, a good deal has been said about gentlemen who are determined to give us Democrats a whole lot of trouble during this extra session, and I, for one, invite them now to do their worst, and, in the language of Shakespeare, I say to them:

Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not intend to allow this matter to be sidetracked to gratify the desire of gentlemen who think they may want days or weeks in which to consider it. We have been considering it for years. This identical measure was before the Senate last winter, nearly all winter, and every gentleman here has convictions upon it.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will indicate how much time he wants for debate, I will try and agree. Otherwise I am going to demand the previous question on the passage of this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman going to give any opportunity for amendment?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Well, I will, if gentlemen want to debate the question. If not, I want to pass the resolution.

Mr. MANN. We desire a chance to consider, debate, and amend it, and the gentleman ought to afford us that opportunity.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that if there is any responsibility for passing this measure at this time—a measure that the American people have been demanding for four decades—the responsibility rests here, and we are going to pass a resolution to-day to elect United States Senators by the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If gentlemen on that side want a reasonable opportunity for debate and amendment, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has indicated that he is ready to come to an agreement. If you do not want it, say so, and we will proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. In the last Congress the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] introduced a joint resolution on the subject, which was reported to the House favorably. It came up for consideration by unanimous consent. I objected to the unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution at that time, and was very severely criticised by that side of the House. Now, this resolution is very different from that joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman from Illinois is not responsible for it if he does not vote for it. We assume the responsibility if we vote for it.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but does the gentleman mean to say that in amending the Constitution both sides of the House should not have the fullest opportunity for consideration?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I have just stated, the gentleman from Missouri has proposed to give that to you.

Mr. MANN. At the last session of Congress gentlemen on that side of the House favored a certain joint resolution on this subject. They now have an entirely different joint resolution on the same subject, and yet do not desire to give, as it seems to me, a full opportunity for consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the entire resolution does not embrace 12 lines of reading matter; that any Member of this House can read it in one minute, that this question has been thrashed out and considered for years in this House, and if the gentleman wants a reasonable time for debate, or a reasonable time to offer amendments, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has stated that he would like to have you make a proposition, and say what time you want.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course it is unnecessary to discuss the question as to whether it is to go over or not. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has stated that he did not propose to let the bill go over. He intends to proceed with its immediate consideration. The question now is as to whether or not gentlemen on that side of the House desire to agree to a reasonable time, within the limitations of to-day's debate.

Mr. MANN. There is no necessity for an agreement about time. The gentleman has the power at any time to move the previous question on the passage of the resolution, and undoubtedly has the power to carry it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Missouri will have to move the previous question at the end of an hour. I understand he does not desire to take advantage of that right, if there is a desire for more debate and opportunity for amendment on that side of the House. If that side of the House want more time they can get it. If not, the gentleman from Missouri can go ahead and use his hour and yield such time as is requested on that side of the House, and at the end of the hour move the previous question, but we do not desire to do that if you will indicate a reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Missouri can reserve a minute or more of his hour and take the floor and move the previous question at any time. Does the gentleman from Missouri propose to give any opportunity for amendment?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Is the gentleman addressing his question to me?

Mr. MANN. To either gentleman; I suppose the gentleman from Missouri is the one to answer.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will answer the gentleman if his inquiry is addressed to me. A colloquy has been going on for some time and the gentleman has been using my name frequently, and if he desires to ask a question I will answer it.

Mr. MANN. I asked the gentleman from Missouri the same question a while ago.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. And the gentleman from Missouri said yes. The trouble about it is that some gentlemen have objected to things here so long and so often that they have become chronic objectors, and are never quite ready to vote on any question supposed to confer a power or respond to a demand of the people.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have heard that so often that it is not new to me.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. And the gentleman will hear it again unless he reforms.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri is not likely to reform my methods.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan if he wants two hours of debate on that side, or three, or four, or a day?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have had so little opportunity to consult with gentlemen upon this side that it is difficult to know how much time will be consumed; but in view of the importance of the matter, and in view of the statements made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who I suppose spoke by authority, that this matter is going to be concluded to-night, anyway——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was speaking with the authority of the gentleman from Missouri, who has the bill in charge.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan (continuing). I will ask for at least four hours' general debate—two hours upon a side.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if I correctly understood the gentleman, I will ask unanimous consent that general debate may proceed on this resolution for four hours—two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan and two hours by myself.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to know whether amendments to the resolution will be in order at any time during the general debate or whether amendments must be offered while the bill is being read under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. Amendments are not in order during general debate.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he will not include in his request some provision about amendments? I am not anxious to extend the time of debate, but he can just as well include in his request that amendments shall be in order during general debate or at the close of general debate.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I have no objection to gentlemen offering such amendments as in their judgment they think proper during the two hours of debate.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the gentleman includes that in his request.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I do not think it is necessary to include it in the request.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is, from the statement just made by the Speaker, as I understand it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman from Missouri think, in view of the statement made by the Speaker to the effect that amendments will not be in order during general debate, that we ought to have some understanding that amendments can be presented and have them pending, even though they may not be considered until the end of the general debate and during the reading of the bill?

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman can read any amepdments he desires to offer in his own time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois that he, or any other Member, can read any amendment he desires to offer in his own time. That is all that should be required.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not suggest that I wanted to read an amendment, but that I wanted some method suggested by which amendments could be introduced and have them pending for consideration while the bill was being read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask a question, if the gentleman will yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois seems to be quite anxious to amend this resolution, and I would like to ask him if it is his purpose to support the resolution for the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I do intend to support the resolution, and I am not sure that I want to offer an amendment to it, but I may, and I desire to have that opportunity——

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. But, Mr. Speaker, I am answering the question of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I understood the Speaker to state, in answer to a parliamentary inquiry of my colleague, that amendments would not be in order by a gentleman who obtained the floor in so-called general debate. That rule is undoubtedly true of course as to debate in Committee of the Whole, but this is a House bill on the House Calendar, and any Member obtaining the floor, as I recall the rules and precedents, may offer an amendment and have it voted upon unless a different arrangement is made.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman making a point of order or propounding a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I simply call that to the attention of the Chair. I think the Chair was in error in the statement, evidently having in mind general debate in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to repeat the request for unanimous consent which I made a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his request.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may proceed for four hours, two hours of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] and two hours by myself, and that during the general debate any gentleman having the floor for the purpose of discussing the matter may offer amendments in his own time, and those amendments will be considered as pending; and at the expiration of four hours the previous question to be considered as ordered on the resolution and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate proceed on this resolution for four hours, half the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG]; that during that debate any Member shall be permitted in his own time to offer an amendment and have it considered as pending, and that at the end of the four hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and pending amendments.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Of course, I suppose it is understood that my request is that the previous question shall be considered as ordered when the general debate ceases, even if it does not run for four hours.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Missouri begins—I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman after he begins—I desire to say that I voted for a similar resolution some time ago, and have voted for it two or three times; and I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he will not, for my benefit and the benefit of others here who have thus voted, kindly explain the difference between this resolution and the resolution that was passed in the House the last time the subject was before the House.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am going to consume but a few minutes' time in the discussion of this question. Some criticism has been made here that we are proceeding with undue haste, and suggestions have also been heard that the report accompanying this resolution was printed within the last hour or two; that the resolution itself was only introduced during this session of Congress and within the last 10 days.

Mr. Speaker, charged with responsibility to faithfully serve a great constituency, on the first day that this House convened, the first hour it was possible to do so, I introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people. On the second day of this session this resolution was introduced. Just as soon as the committees of this House were formed I sought to advise members of the committee that this measure would be considered, and invited their attendance upon a meeting of the committee.

If there is blame to attach because members of the committee which reported this resolution have not had more time for consideration, it is not due to any fault of the committee on committees, which announced the make-up of the Democratic side of all the committees of this House even before the House met, but it is due to the committee on committees on the minority side, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who took until last Tuesday, day before yesterday, as I understand, to announce his committees.

But I am not going to discuss that; neither will I be drawn into a discussion of the fact that various changes from time to time have appeared in the language employed in these several resolutions which have been introduced. Let me say in a general way all of those resolutions present a similar thought and had a common purpose. They all respond to a sentiment in this Nation which is as wide as the Republic, a sentiment which permeates our country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a sentiment which is compelling Representatives to respond to public will. The deliberate judgment of the people of the United States, of the great mass of the people, demands that we reform the method of electing Senators by changing from a system which has sullied the fair names of States and traduced the character of gentlemen who have sought and won high political honors. The people demand that Senators of the United States who serve them in the highest legislative tribunal in the world shall be elected by a direct vote and shall respond to the will of the people. Gentlemen dilate upon the great constitutional questions involved—and they are great questions—and who admonish us to prudence and deliberation, forget that for 20 years or more the people of the United States have compelled obedience to their will in this Chamber and secured the passage of innumerable resolutions through this House.

There has been grave difficulty, I grant, for the people to reach the ear of all public servants. Just as you remove in point of distance a man charged with great responsibilities from the source which gave him power, just to that extent you diminish the opportunity of those who confer the power to get a response to popular appeal to that public servant. We stand with the great rank and file of the American people, and demand that this very day the House shall again go on record in favor of this great reform measure, pledged in platforms and advocated by leading spirits in all political parties. I trust the House of Representatives will again, and on this day, send greetings to the American people that we yield to their desires and cheerfully respond to their demands by sending to the Senate of the United States a resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States by which the people will be able to vote directly for United States Senators. As to the form of the resolution, I desire to state that according to my information the pending resolution has received more consideration in another body, has been more deliberately, dispassionately, and intelligently discussed there than any other resolution on this subject ever submitted to either House of Congress, and that by reason of and on account of the fact that this identical resolution was fully and ably discussed in that body during the last session, and because it secured such a large support there, a support which will be augmented, I believe, by others who are now Members of that body, thus making the passage of this resolution an assured fact, your committee has accepted it and recommended its adoption by the House.

For these reasons largely, and because of its own merits, we have seen fit to report here in identical words the resolution reported by the Senate Committee on Judiciary during the last session of Congress. Mr. Speaker, the last time this resolution, or a similar resolution, passed this House——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether there is any possibility of gentlemen on this side having an opportunity to hear what is going on in this Hall?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that the House is not in order. The point is well taken. Gentlemen upon this side of the Hall have a right to hear the debate, and those who desire to converse will please retire to the cloakroom.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Missouri begins, I want to say this——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. The speech the gentleman is going to make is a good one, but I can not yield right now.

Mr. RAKER. I am not going to take up any time, but it seems this part of the Hall here——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is not in order.

Mr. RAKER. But the gentleman yielded.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman refused to yield.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the last time a resolution similar to this passed this House it passed under suspension of the rules and was declared to have received two-thirds of all the votes cast, but, as a matter of fact, it received about seven-eighths of all the votes.

Before that, and only a few years ago, a similar resolution passed the House, and my recollection is that on a viva voce vote there was not a single vote cast against its passage. In other words, I believe that for the last 15 or 20 years public sentiment has been crystallizing around this great question, a question so important, I think, to the future of this great Republic that gentlemen here will gladly respond to public will and to their conception of duty and vote this resolution up to the other end of this Capitol.

Believing that this measure will receive practically unanimous support, and believing that every gentleman here on both sides of this Hall who is really in favor of this great reform, who really wants to see the Constitution amended as proposed, will vote down every amendment offered, either by gentlemen on that side or by gentlemen on this, I now ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] to consume a part of his time, and I reserve the balance of my own.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to consume very much of the time of the House upon this proposition. This House has on several occasions passed joint resolutions in favor of the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. I take it that the sentiment upon that question is overwhelmingly in favor of the proposition on both sides of this Chamber. And it is not any part of my purpose to oppose that feature of this resolution.

At the last session of Congress, as I recollect it, a resolution in favor of election of Members of the Senate by the direct vote of the people was passed in this body without a division. But, sir, this resolution goes much further than that, and I wish the House to know exactly what they are doing when they vote upon this resolution. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has said that this resolution is the same as that which was reported to the Senate by Senator BORAH last winter, but he has omitted to say that it is a very different proposition from that which was finally submitted to the Senate and upon which the final vote was taken. This resolution provides for an amendment of section 4 of Article I, paragraph 1, of the Constitution. That has nothing to do directly with the question of whether the people should themselves vote for Members of the Senate or whether they should be chosen by the State legislatures.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman has stated that this resolution as now proposed is not the same one that was voted upon in the Senate.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. JAMES. Now, that is true; but is not this the same resolution that was reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate before it was amended there?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has already said that, and I have said that.

Mr. JAMES. I thought you ought to put that in your remarks so that your side might know that their own party reported this proposition in the Senate, which is identical to the one here offered now.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. If the gentleman had been giving his usual attention, he would have heard me say it.

Mr. JAMES. I do not think the gentleman was as clear as he usually is or I would not have drawn the deduction I did.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Section 4 of Article I of the Constitution, paragraph 1, which it is proposed to amend, is in the following language:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The effect of this amendment now proposed is to strike out the portion of the Constitution which gives to the Congress of the United States if it desires the right to regulate the election of Senators in the States, a power which has been held by the Congress of the United States since the formation of the Constitution and which at some future time it may be extremely necessary that it should exercise.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN]?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The effect of the adoption of the amendment in the form proposed in this resolution would be to create the condition by which Congress would still have power to regulate the election pertaining to Members of the House and not of the Senate, would it not?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I wish to say that I do not know. And I have studied the language as far as I have had opportunity to do so. I think it was undoubtedly the intention of the men who framed this provision to leave that power over the election of Representatives. But I do not know whether they have done it or not.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It would certainly leave no power as to the election of Senators with Congress.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Absolutely none. If the words of the amendment to the Constitution which it is proposed to adopt are approved by a sufficient number of States, it would in terms take away the power even to regulate the election of Members of this House, and I am not sure whether that is cured by the words of the resolution, which are as follows:

> That in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the time of holding elections for Senators—

And so forth.

That is in the resolution. It is not in the amendment. The language of the amendment would apply to both, and it is attempted to cure that by this ambiguous language.

Now, sir, nobody can foresee the future. Nobody can tell how necessary it may be in the future in some State or States of this Union for Congress to have the power of regulating the election of Senators of the United States.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I do.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if he has prepared an amendment to cure this apparent defect?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I shall offer an amendment, now that the gentleman has suggested it. I will do it at this point, and I will ask that it be read at the Clerk's desk and be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by striking out, on page 1, line 7, all after the word "vacancies" up to and including the word "Senators," in line 10, and, on page 2, by striking out all of lines 9, 10, and 11.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will mark that as "Amendment No. 1."

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. KENDALL. Before the gentleman proceeds further, I want to inquire whether, if his amendment were adopted, it would restore this resolution to the condition it was in when it was voted upon in the Senate?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Absolutely.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will ask leave to withdraw the amendment just offered and submit it in a little different form, reciting the language. But it is of the same effect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan withdraws his first amendment.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I ask that the modified amendment be read at the desk and considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend as follows:
> Strike out on page 1 the language beginning in line 7, as follows: "And in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators."
> And strike out on page 2 the language beginning in line 9, as follows:
> "The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof."

Mr. CALDER. That makes it clear.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I do.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Michigan if that is substantially what is known as the Sutherland amendment?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. It is absolutely the same as the Sutherland amendment.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. That would preserve to the people the right to vote directly for a Senator, but it would retain in the Congress the authority to fix the time, place, and manner of election?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Not the place, I should say. The time is excepted.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman think that the amendment affects the right of the States to prescribe the qualifications of voters who vote for United States Senators, and the administration of the laws relative to such elections, and the power to appoint officers to superintend the election of United States Senators; and will it not authorize Congress to authorize and control the officers of the election of United States Senators, such as clerks, United States marshals, and other officers to supervise them?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I would not attempt, in the little time that I have for the consideration of this matter, to say just how far the authority of Congress would go under that amendment, but I will say this to the gentleman, that it would be just exactly the same as it is to-day, that there would be no difference; that it simply leaves in the Constitution a provision that is there now.

Mr. BARTLETT. With reference to what—with reference to Representatives?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. No; Representatives and Senators.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then, it is the purpose of this amendment, as I understand it, whether expressed in so many words or not, to vest in Congress, or, as the gentleman has put it, to leave in Congress, as he now construes the Constitution to mean, the full, exclusive, plenary power to regulate everything with reference to the election of United States Senators.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. It leaves the same power that we have at present, no more and no less; the power under which this Government has existed ever since the Constitution was adopted.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will permit another question——

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am sorry my friend is not a little more frank about the matter. I do not charge him with not being sincere, but——

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Oh, if the gentleman's party friends had given us a little more time to consider this matter I might have been able to give a more complete answer to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to say that I favor this resolution as it has been introduced; and I am sorry that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] and his party associates on the committee and in the House have not all the time that they deem reasonably necessary. If I had it in my power, on every important question I would give you full opportunity to amend and discuss; but I want to say to the House and to the gentleman, that if that amendment is adopted I think there are many of us who will under no circumstances vote for this resolution with that amendment upon it.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I am not surprised at the statement of the gentleman. It discloses a state of affairs which I had suspected, that there are some gentlemen in this House who are not in favor of the election of Senators by the people, and yet, who will vote for this proposition if they can have combined with it the other proposition, to leave it absolutely in the power of a corrupt State to defeat the will of the people and to defeat the will of this body, while the American Congress stands by utterly helpless. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I will yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I should like to inquire where, in the opinion of the gentleman, these corrupt States are?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Many States at times have been corrupt.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Shake not your gory locks at us. You can not find them in the South.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. It has been charged by southern gentlemen at times.

Mr. CLAYTON. Some of the Southern States were corruptly governed during the reconstruction period by the Republican Party and carpetbaggers and scalawags put in charge of the State governments of the South by the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I do not care to be drawn into all of these side issues, but I wish to say just one word about the manner in which this resolution appears here; and I want to say, in the first place, that I do not cast any reflection of unfairness upon the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the chairman of this committee, or his party colleagues, but I do think they have acted with undue haste in forcing this important matter before this body with so little chance to consider it. Of course I do not think that this body needs much time to consider the principal proposition, the election of Senators by the people, but it does need time to consider the language which shall be written into the Constitution of the United States to endure, perhaps, for ages. This Committee on the Election of President and Vice President was appointed day before yesterday in the afternoon. That evening the gentleman from Missouri sent out notices for a meeting the next morning at 10 o'clock. Many gentlemen, like myself, had public business in the departments that morning, and we did not reach our committee room until after this meeting had been held. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANFORTH], a member of the minority, reached there a few minutes before the committee concluded its proceedings.

I charge no bad faith, I charge no attempt to prevent the minority's being present, but the effect of it all was that the matter was not considered by either side of the House with any degree of care, and if it had been, I do not believe the resolution would have come in here with such crudities of language in it as appear in many instances. I hope that the gentlemen on the other side of the House will forego their desire to take from the Congress of the United States the power, in any event, to regulate the election of Senators, that they will permit this amendment to be adopted and the resolution, substantially as introduced except in that respect, to pass. [Applause.] I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, as long as I have a voice and vote in this House I shall stand for all reforms demanded by the patriotic and intelligent voters of the country. During my four years of service in this body I have consistently and persistently fought all forms of special privilege intended to benefit the few at the expense of the many. I have vigorously opposed all propositions to raid the Government Treasury by the granting of subsidies and have insisted upon an economical administration of the affairs of government to the end that the burdens of the people may be lightened.

The country is to be congratulated upon the fact that the present Democratic membership of the House stands as a unit against the evils I have enumerated and has already shown its good intentions and devotion to the people and to the country by cutting down the expenses of the House over $182,000 per year; and this is but a drop in the bucket as compared with what we will save the people when the various departments of government are placed on a business basis. We are going to practice what we preach by reducing the cost of government to its actual needs.

And now we come to another great reform—the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced a joint resolution in the Sixtieth Congress, reintroduced it in the Sixty-first Congress, and again introduced it on the first day of this session proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States by a direct vote of the people. The resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 20) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendments be proposed to the legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall become and be a part of the Constitution, namely: In lieu of the first and second paragraphs of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America the following shall be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution:

"SEC. 3. That the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, who shall be elected by a direct vote of the people thereof for a term of six years, and each Senator shall have one vote; a plurality of the votes cast for candidates for Senator shall elect, and the electors shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

"When vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, in the representation of any State in the Senate the same shall be filled for the unexpired term thereof in the same manner as is provided for the election of Senators in paragraph one: Provided, That the executive thereof shall make temporary appointment until the next general or special election, held in accordance with the statutes or constitution of such State.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as a part of the Constitution."

Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution shows where I have stood for several years on this great and important question. I am one of those who believe the people can be trusted, and the closer the relationship between the Government and the people the better it will be for all concerned. In my judgment the nearer a governmental agency is to the source of power the greater will be its value, probity, and efficiency. Direct responsibility results in honesty, and good faith sustains the wavering, lends encouragement to the timid, and exposes and defeats the unworthy, incompetent, and corrupt. The tendency of government the world over is toward the people. The movement is gradual, but continuous and persistent; there has been no backward step; no retrogression or recession. Without haste or thought of retracing our steps we have moved forward in the direction of liberty and the closer relationship between the people and the Government.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House is one of great importance. It is a long step in the right direction, and when enacted into law the will of the people will be supreme in the United States Senate. Wealth, plutocracy, and subserviency to the interests will no longer be the qualifications necessary for a Senator, but rugged honesty, recognized ability, admitted capacity, and wide experience will be required of those who occupy a seat in the highest lawmaking body of the land. I know, Mr. Speaker, there are some who style themselves as "watch dogs" of the Constitution, who come forward with a storm of condemnation whenever it is proposed to amend that document. I am free to confess that in my humble judgment no instrument in the history of the world compares with the Constitution of the United States, but Article V of the Constitution gives Congress the power of amendment, and this right has been exercised time and again as the exigencies demanded.

Both time and experience have shown that as a whole the Constitution is good and wise and the people have given it their heartiest approval; but devotion to the instrument itself should prompt us to make such changes as will insure to the people the greatest degree of liberty. When those who formed this Government looked over the world they saw nothing but arbitrary governments; a monarchial form of government prevailed everywhere. Their experiment was great and grand, yet it was hazardous. They were determined, however, to form a government of the people. Some of them, realizing the splendid ability and the vast capacity of the American people for self-government, were willing to lay aside all of the shackles and forms of arbitrary government, but there were others who had less faith in the people for self-government and insisted on retaining some of the influences and agencies peculiar to a monarchical form of government. I believe experience has taught us that such agencies can safely be dispensed with and that we can with perfect safety bring the Government closer to the people by allowing them to vote direct for United States Senators.

Mr. Speaker, the present method of electing Senators has made the United States Senate the home of many men of great wealth, whose hearts do not beat in sympathy with the interests of the plain people and who never would have occupied a seat in that body, if their election had been left to a direct vote of the people. We have reached a time in the history of the country when the Senate is no longer looked upon as the safe, conservative body, the so-called balance wheel, but is looked upon with dread and apprehension by the average American citizen, while the House, with all its faults and uncertainties, is regarded as the representative body of the American people, where can be heard the voice of the average citizen and where his rights will be protected and enforced. This condition is due to the fact that legislatures are frequently invaded by men of great wealth, shrewdness, and audacity, and the rights of the people give way to the exactions of corporate power; and he who can serve the corporations by controlling a legislature, through intrigue or persuasion, is regarded as fully equipped for service as a Senator, in which position he can guard and protect the interests of the corporation he serves. In this way the standard for the exalted position of United States Senator is debased by corporate influence. The wire-puller and the schemer are frequently preferred to the statesman and the patriot, and the proud title of United States Senator has lost much of its power in the suspicions which rest in the public mind as to the manner and conditions of their selection.

Mr. Speaker, when Senators are elected by the people there will be no legislative deadlocks, which in the past have not only resulted in scandal, but have frequently deprived certain States of an equal representation in this body. The Constitution provides that each State shall be entitled to two Senators, but during the past 20 years there has scarcely been a time when one or more States were not tied up in a deadlock over the election of a Senator, and therefore were deprived of their fair and equal representation. This was an injustice to the State and unfair to the whole country.

The present system has had an evil effect on the election of members of the legislatures. The two seats in the United States Senate for each State are highly coveted prizes in American public life, and as long as legislatures choose our Senators, those who covet these prizes will make it their business to choose members of the legislatures, and in this way much corruption and fraud will creep into our public life.

It has been said by another that the United States Senate of to-day may be likened unto the Roman senate of old. Rome, at the zenith of her power, boasted of the learning of her senators, which has been handed down to posterity and forms to-day the masterwork of the Latin tongue. But her senate became the goal of those who bought their seats with their gold, thus driving out the men whose brilliancy shone in brains alone; their laws began to decline; the people lost their virility; they lost their manhood and they lost Rome. Money is forever the same. Its one inherent quality in the social universe is cohesion. Its power wherever exercised is proportionate to its mass. Separated from the individuality of its owner it becomes a menace to the body politic, the destroyer of social equality and the creator of caste. The immortal Lincoln, with keen insight, foresaw the future of the United States Senate when he prophetically admonished his countrymen to "beware of the money power which seeks to perpetuate its reign until the wealth of the country has passed into the hands of the few and the Nation is lost."

Mr. Speaker, I believe the only way to remedy these evils is to so change the Constitution that the people may vote direct for Senators the same as they now vote for Members of the House. Every Member of Congress who believes in a republican form of government, a government by the people and for the people, and who is in favor of preserving the sovereignty in the hands of the citizens will vote for this resolution. Its adoption will bring the Government closer to the people, will prevent corruption and scandal in State legislatures, will lessen the temptation of political parties to gerrymander legislative districts for partisan purposes, and will make United States Senators directly responsible to the individual citizen. We have recently passed a resolution providing for a great exposition to be held in the city of San Francisco to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal, to which we have invited the nations of the world. How fitting it would be to signalize it by the submission and adoption of this amendment to the Constitution, thus publishing to the world that the greatest Republic on earth has given to its people direct control of the legislative department of Government.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this resolution will pass without a dissenting voice.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I now yield 15 minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG], who has just spoken, and to his criticism of haste on the part of the committee, I wish, as a member of the committee, to state, as doubtless the chairman will later state at some length, that the question of consideration of this measure was taken up by the committee, and it was the unanimous view of the members present at yesterday's meeting, including members of the minority, that there would be no prejudice, no undue haste, in its consideration at yesterday's meeting, and in taking a vote at the same meeting. In view of the absence of several members, including the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG], it was agreed by unanimous consent that though the vote of absent members would not affect the vote of the committee, they would be given the right to vote on the question and be so recorded by the committee.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT EVOLVED FROM MILITARY ORGANIZATION.

Mr. Speaker, this question involves the organic law of this land. America is the only country where there is, strictly speaking, constitutional or organic law. History shows that governments grew out of military organizations that were created primarily for the purpose of a better self-defense. They started when families in the face of common enemies stopped their own quarrels and organized clans. Out of these military organizations clan governments were formed. When clans, confronted by a common danger, submerged their differences and formed tribes, the larger military organization gave birth to tribal government. When great warring tribes, confronted by a common danger, united and formed nations, the still larger military organizations gave birth to the great monarchical governments of to-day.

Growing out of military systems the older governments of the world are patterned on military lines.

Anyone familiar with a military organization knows that power to be effective must be concentrated, must be lodged in a supreme head, whose authority is transmitted downward in gradual stages until it reaches the rank and file of the army. In this way every government of history, including the government from which ours sprang, originally lodged authority in a supreme head and in a hierarchy of nobility, practically excluding the masses of the people from civil as from military authority. The rulers, being human, and holding the power, naturally adopted the hereditary principle for its transmission and perpetuation.

EVOLUTIONARY TRANSFER OF AUTHORITY FROM RULERS TO THE PEOPLE.

When self-defense and war came to occupy not all but only a part of the thought of the Nation, the military principle in government began to yield to a growing demand of the people for a share in civil authority. As the normal condition of society steadily became more one of peace and less one of war the necessity for centralization of power steadily declined, and the demand of the people for participation in government steadily grew and gradually overcame the opposition of hereditary rulers, reluctant to part with power. It can be stated broadly that the progress of civil government has been a steady evolution of decentralization—the slow but steady passing down of authority from rulers to the people.

The fact of fundamental importance for us to remember at this juncture is that, in spite of setbacks due to revolutionary excesses in particular cases, the results have been beneficent, tending toward the progress of the world. The question for us to determine in passing upon this resolution is simply whether its provisions are revolutionary or evolutionary. If they are evolutionary, then the light of all history shows that they are wise and should be adopted.

THE CONSTITUTION AN EVOLUTION.

The fastest evolution has taken place in Anglo-Saxon lands, where the monarch and the nobility have been shorn of most of their power. At the time that our Government was founded a conviction had crystallized in the Anglo-Saxon world that the supreme civil power could be lodged safely in the hands of the people themselves [applause]; and when this Union was established, the supreme power of the land was lodged in the people and expressed in their organic law. As great as was the forward step in the adoption of the Constitution, it was evolutionary and not revolutionary, for our fathers in their wisdom fully realized the limitations and weaknesses of human nature, and the difficulties and dangers that naturally beset the practical operations of decentralized, popular government. The very organic instrument that lodged supreme power in the hands of the people provided in its practical operation for a double system of restraints, the restraints of subdivision, and the restraints of representative agents.

OURS A GOVERNMENT OF RESTRAINTS.

The two great divisions of authority are the individual States and the United States. The authority lodged in the people of individual States and in their governments constitutes a fundamental balance and check upon the exercise of the powers lodged in the Federal Government.

The powers of the Federal Government and, indeed, of all the State governments are further subdivided into three coordinate branches—legislative, judicial, executive. The legislative branch is still further divided into two houses, an upper and a lower house.

Restraint through the employment of representative agents is as largely developed as restraints through subdivision. All of the actual operations of government, as provided in the Constitution, are carried on through representative agents, and most of the operations are in the hands of agents chosen by agents. In only one house of one branch, the lower house of the legislative branch, are the agents chosen by the people themselves. Under the Constitution the upper house of the legislative branch and the executive branch are two degrees removed from the people, while the judicial branch is three degrees removed from the people.

With such a combined system of checks and restraints the Constitution of the United States in vesting the supreme power in the people and even permitting universal or manhood suffrage was only a step in evolution, and not a matter of revolution in Anglo-Saxon institutions.

REVOLUTION IMPOSSIBLE IN AMERICA.

In providing for changes or amendments the Constitution contemplated further evolution, and in the method of amending, the restraints and safeguards are so developed that violent and revolutionary changes are practically impossible.

In the evolutionary development of nearly a century and a quarter there has been no fundamental change in the system of subdivision of powers either between the Federal Government and the State governments or between the branches of the Federal Government or the branches of government in any State. The Federal Government is exercising its powers more and more and is entering fields that appear new, but in reality no new powers have been assumed. There is at times talk of usurpation of power on the part of one branch of the Government, but in reality no organic change or practice has taken place.

EVOLUTION RESTRICTED.

Evolutionary development has been confined and is now confined to extending the control of the people over representative agents. The first development was in the assumption of power to vote for the Executive, bringing this branch of government down to one degree instead of two degrees removed. It must be remembered, however, that though the people vote substantially for Presidents, the candidates are still chosen by conventions, or are two degrees removed, though individual States, Alabama first, and now Oregon, are giving the people opportunity to vote on their choice of candidates for the Presidency. This evolutionary development has been long in use, though without formal amendment to the Constitution, and its effects have been beneficial. The right to vote directly on candidates for the Presidency will doubtless be extended to all the States. The proposition now is to bring down the election of Senators to a direct vote, making these representative agents one degree instead of two degrees removed from the people.

DIRECT ELECTION OF SENATORS OVERDUE.

The power to do this has already been assumed by the people in many of the individual States, and the experience in each case has confirmed the conviction, which is now almost universal, that it should be extended in a formal way to all the States. Such an amendment is clearly a step in the evolution of government; the time is clearly more than ripe for the step to be taken. There is no tinge of revolution in the proposition. The results could only be advantageous. It would be the part of wisdom for this amendment to be adopted and the people to be given this added control of elections.

I realize that men have always differed as to the part that the people should take in the affairs of government, and that this difference lies at the foundation of all party governments. One temperament, one type of mind, has more confidence in the masses of the people than the other type of mind. One type wants the Government conserved more as it has been, and that type forms the basis for the conservative party in every nation. The other type of mind wants the Government brought down more rapidly to the people; it is more liberal in its confidence in the people, and that type forms the basis for the liberal party in every government. There may be changes of the names, there may be many parties springing up for particular purposes at particular times, but in the long evolution of government in all countries where there is a conception of popular government this will be the fundamental dividing line between the two great parties.

ONLY REACTIONARIES CAN OPPOSE MEASURE.

The time is so ripe for this step—the election of Senators by direct vote of the people—it has been so thoroughly considered and so widely tried out in individual States; it is such a comparatively short step and so in keeping with the manifest evolution of our institutions that even the conservative element in our midst can freely accept it without misgiving. Only men of reactionary temperament can harbor misgivings.

It should be borne in mind that the amendment would have no effect upon the division of powers between the Federal Government and the individual States. It takes from the Federal Government no power granted by the Constitution; it takes from the States no power reserved by the Constitution. It alters not the balance of power as between large and small States, maintaining the equality of suffrage in the Senate, nor does it tend to any such disturbance, for Article V of the Constitution puts it beyond the reach of any amendment to reduce this equal suffrage for any State, large or small, without the consent of the State. Furthermore, the amendment does not alter the division of powers between the three coordinate branches of the Government. It only affects one form of the legislative branch, and the whole change in the legislative branch would not relatively be as great as the change in the executive branch by the direct voting of the people for the Presidents, which change has proved beneficial. The powers of the Senate remain unchanged; the term of office of Senators remains unchanged.

Some timid minds may have misgivings that the amendment would remove restraint upon the action of the lower House, needed to prevent hasty or revolutionary legislation in times of popular passion or enthusiasm.

PRACTICAL EFFECT.

Now, follow the course of a measure considered revolutionary, originating in this House in the midst of a great wave of popular enthusiasm. After passing this House it would go to the Senate. Two-thirds, at least, of the Senators would have been elected at times prior to the election of the Representatives, one-third two years prior, and one-third four years prior, which would antedate the wave of enthusiasm; moreover, one-third of the Senators would have terms extending two years beyond the terms of the Representatives, and one-third four years beyond. The Senate would still exercise the restraining function of a second branch and would still be a conservative second branch.

But even if such a measure passed both Houses of the legislative branch it would promptly come upon the check of the executive branch, with the veto power. If it should get beyond this obstacle and be placed on the statute books it would be subject to review by the Supreme Court, whose members are farthest removed from the influence of public clamor, holding their offices for life, and appointed by Presidents extending back over a long period. This Supreme Court would put the statute up to the test of the Constitution, and since this amendment does not affect the methods of amending the Constitution, and since these methods make hasty and revolutionary amendments almost impossible, it may be said that the proposed amendment still leaves it almost impossible to adopt revolutionary measures in our country. In fact, measures clearly in line with public policy, conservative changes recognized almost universally as advisable, find the inherent impediments in the way of constitutional amendment almost insurmountable. But for these impediments, the election of Senators by direct vote of the people would have been in operation for the last twenty years.

EVOLUTION PREVENTS REVOLUTION.

The difficulties, obstacles, checks, and restraints upon progressive changes in our Government are many fold greater than in the English Government. It is the slowness of response of the various representative agents, one and two degrees removed from the people, to the justified demands for progressive measures, that is causing the rapid growth of the movement for the initiative, referendum, and recall. Further failure to meet the growing demand for this movement will cause an inevitable growth of socialism. When evolutionary changes overdue are long withheld, then revolutionary measures grow in strength. Let not those who believe in representative government think they should oppose all changes. Further postponing the legitimate evolutionary step in the development of representative government as proposed in this resolution must inevitably discredit all representative government——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri if I may have five minutes more?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman five minutes additional.

PUBLIC CONFIDENCE IN SENATE SHAKEN.

Mr. HOBSON. It is no partisan spirit that constrains me to point out that the holding of power so long by one party has dammed up the stream of evolution until the waters of reform are overflowing. It is wiser to open the gate than to endanger the mill. In the blocking of legitimate reform, no agent has been more effective than the United States Senate. This very resolution is a good illustration. Thirty-one State legislatures have acted favorably, the House of Representatives has passed a similar resolution time and again, both great political parties have made it a part of their platforms, and yet the Senate still blocks the way. It is not overstating the situation to say that public confidence in the Senate has been seriously shaken and the most serious blows to public confidence have come through the present method of choosing Senators by the legislatures.

PRESENT METHOD INVITES CORRUPTION.

It can not be denied that the method of election by the small number who compose a legislature invites corruption from great moneyed interests seeking to secure or to hold unmolested the power to tax the American people by controlling the United States Senate, and invites corruption from men of great wealth seeking a similar power or seeking the honor and prestige of the office.

Nothing would so restore public confidence in the Senate as the adoption of this resolution, giving the election over into the hands of the people. It is high time to restore this confidence of the people if we would check the formidable growth of socialism in the land.

WOULD PROMOTE EFFICIENCY OF STATE LEGISLATURES.

It must be further admitted that the present method of election of Senators has been accompanied by an ever increasing frequency of demoralization in the State legislatures. Placing the election of Senators in the hands of the people would really restore to the people of the States a better control over their own legislatures; it would raise the standard of State legislators and turn the attention of the legislatures to the needs of the States. The passage of this resolution would thus profoundly promote the highest efficiency of both the Federal and the State Governments.

WOULD PROMOTE POLITICAL EDUCATION OF PEOPLE.

But even promoting efficiency in both of our divisions of Government, State and national, does not measure the full benefits of this reform. The greatest benefit of all lies in the fact that it would contribute fundamentally to the political and patriotic development of the people themselves. The great law of development is recurring exercise of the activities. The glory of free institutions and self-government is the development of the people through the exercise of the functions of government. It is wise even to go faster than the highest efficiency of the machinery of government would dictate, so that the people in making mistakes would learn from them and rise to higher planes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Would it be imposing to ask the chairman for three minutes more, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I do not believe I can give the gentleman that much time, but I will yield him one minute more.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, the action called for by this resolution is evolution. If we are wise we will not dam it up. The current of evolution dammed up too long brings the flood of revolution. This reform is now overdue. Its delay has contributed to abuses and has shaken the confidence of the American people. The passage of this resolution is demanded by the highest considerations of efficiency of government, by the highest considerations of the welfare of the people, by the highest considerations of the orderly evolution of free institutions. The people realize this. They want this reform. They are entitled to it. I am heartily in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair asks the indulgence of the House for a minute. On the question arising this morning, whether an amendment was in order in general debate in the House, the Chair mixed up the rule in the House with the one in the Committee of the Whole, and the Chair asks leave to change the ruling in conformity with the rule, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Whenever the present occupant of the chair makes a mistake and it is called to his notice, he will correct it as swiftly as he made the mistake. [Applause.] Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the popular election of United States Senators, and so I shall vote for this resolution submitting to the States an amendment to the Constitution providing therefor. I wish we might have had a larger opportunity to consider whether some amendment could not wisely be made to it. It seems to me, for instance, that the proposed amendment should provide that the regular election of Senators shall occur at the regular State election to be held next before the vacancy occurs which is to be filled.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. Under the language of this amendment the legislature could do that if it wanted to do so.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Under the terms of this proposed amendment the legislature can regulate the time for such elections. It is a question, however, whether the provision should not be in the organic law.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think the gentleman is right about it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I certainly hope that such an amendment may be adopted before the resolution passes.

There are those who are strongly opposed to the resolution because under its provisions Congress is deprived of its present power to regulate the time and place and manner of electing United States Senators. Personally, I would be glad to see that power retained in Congress. But, in my judgment, this is not a vital defect in the proposed amendment. The Constitution leaves to the legislatures of the several States the authority to determine how the presidential electors shall be appointed. For more than a hundred years, under this provision, the electors have been chosen by the people. The results have been satisfactory. If the States can be trusted in all matters relating to the election of presidential electors, they can surely be trusted in all matters relating to the election of United States Senators.

Our fathers in framing the Constitution undertook to safeguard the Republic by removing the selection of the Chief Executive from the excitement of popular elections. They believed that on election day the people in the several States would gather at the polls and elect their presidential electors, and that then these presidential electors would meet on the proper day and, away from the tumult and excitement of the populace, would select for the Chief Executive the one man in all the country whom they believed to be best qualified for the position. Their scheme was an utter failure. Nothing but the letter of the constitutional provision remains. To all intents and purposes the people of the several States register their will on election day, and the presidential electors whom they elect merely convey to the United States Senate the results of the election.

In a similar manner, they deemed it wise to remove the selection of United States Senators from the excitement of popular elections. They provided that they should be elected by the legislatures of the several States. This provision has already been nullified in many of the States, and the number of States nullifying it is rapidly increasing. The whole trend of public sentiment is in favor of the election of Senators by the people. If the several legislatures could be selected upon the sole issue of the election of such Senators, the situation would be very different. But such is not the fact. The legislatures are not selected for this purpose primarily. Many local issues, not infrequently burning questions, are involved in the election of these legislatures. For this reason, and for many reasons which might be given, it has come to pass that too often the man selected by the legislature is not the choice of the people. It is desirable that there should be a uniform rule as to the time of electing these Senators, and I hope to see this resolution so amended as to provide for the date of such elections.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion there?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. The constitution of my State provides that elections for State officers shall be held in years other than those in which Federal elections are held, the idea being to divorce the consideration of State and National questions that the people might vote more directly on the fitness of men for the positions which they seek; and I simply suggest that idea to the gentleman as contrary to the one he suggested a few moments ago.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. My suggestion is that provision be made for the election of Senators at the last general election, whether for Federal officers or simply for State officers, prior to the vacancy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the people thought when they framed the Constitution of the United States that they were forming and providing for a system of government through which and by which the people could rule, with such checks and balances as would prevent hasty, ill-considered, and revolutionary movements. No one at that time perhaps dreamed that United States Senators would be virtually elected by the people by being selected in a dominant party primary election held one, two, three, and in some instances four years before the term of office was to begin, and seven, eight, nine, and in some cases ten or eleven years before the expiration of the term of service of the United States Senator so selected. Political revolutions and political changes that are not revolutionary can and do take place in much less time than that. When a United States Senator is elected for this long time he has the power and the right under the Constitution to remain there and vote in all legislative matters in the Congress of the United States as he sees proper, although his action may be the very opposite to the then existing political sentiment of his State. From the fact that the agencies and instrumentalities of government, both legislative and executive, have not, in the opinion of the people, fully lived up to and abided by the popular will have grown up the doctrines of the initiative, referendum, and recall. These doctrines to a great extent have grown out of the failure of the instrumentalities of government, as provided by the Constitution, to carry out and duly reflect the will of the people, as the people themselves judge of that conduct.

But I want to say that the doctrine of the recall of a legislator is not new, is not recent. It is older than the Constitution itself. It was actually applied to the delegates in the provisional Congress of the colonies, before the Federal Congress under our present form of government was established, when the delegates held their offices for only one year. I want to read here Article V of the old Articles of Confederation:

ARTICLE V. For the more convenient management of the general interests of the United States Delegates shall be annually appointed in such manner as the legislature of each State shall direct, to meet in Congress on the first Monday in November in every year, with a power reserved to each State to recall its Delegates, or any of them, at any time within the year, and to send others in their stead for the remainder of the year.

That is a part of the legislation in the nature itself of a constitutional provision older than the Constitution and older than the Populist Party, many times over. It is not a new doctrine. It was an idea so prevalent among the people of the Colonies that they provided for it in the Articles of Confederation as applicable to a legislative office that existed only for one year.

Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the committee was considering this resolution or I should have conferred with the chairman and members of the committee with reference to offering an amendment. But the chairman just stated a few moments ago that he was so anxious to get through this resolution in its present form, inasmuch as it had already been considered in another body, where it must pass if passed at all, that he did not want any amendment offered to it, and would ask that every amendment be voted down. Had it not been for that request I should have offered an amendment to this joint resolution, beginning with line 5, on page 2, after the word "years." I will read first the resolution and then the amendment which I expected to offer and which I would offer now if it were not for the fact that I do not propose to attempt to change the resolution in any way by any kind of amendment offered here, however proper and however much I would like to support it, by a provision that does not meet with the approval of the gentlemen who have this matter in charge and who have looked over and surveyed the whole situation. The resolution reads:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

Now, just following the words "six years" I intended to offer this amendment:

With a power reserved to each State to recall its Senators, or either of them, at any time within the period of their service and to send another or others in their stead for the remainder of such period, and the legislatures of the various States shall by appropriate legislation carry into effect this provision.

I think, in order to retain the confidence of the people in their legislators, their agents, their United States Senators, or even Members of this House, if necessary, whether elected by direct vote of the people or otherwise, they should have the power to dismiss their agents or other servants whenever in their judgment, properly and deliberately ascertained, they no longer represent the people who elected them. I think such a provision would tend to perpetuate our Government in strength; that it would not be an element of weakness. If revolution ever comes in this country, it will come, not because the people have not confidence in the form of government itself, in the principles upon which it is founded, but because they have lost confidence in those who are selected to execute their will in the method and manner as now provided. Who of you as a business man would without power of revocation authorize an agent to do business for 6 years, 8 or 10 years in advance of the finality of that business, with no power to dismiss that agent for misconduct or other cause? A State which is rock-ribbed in its democracy or in its republicanism may change, slowly, quietly, but decisively, after a United States Senator has been elected and before his term of office expires, and yet that Senator will continue there to misrepresent the people, not at the time he was elected, but at the time the act of representation must take place. I do not believe such a provision for recall will be otherwise than in accord with public sentiment. But I realize that this resolution must go through another body, and I appreciate the sincerity and honesty of statement by the chairman of this committee [Mr. RUCKER of Missouri] in not wanting to do anything that will give anybody an excuse to vote against the resolution in its main purposes and objects, that United States Senators shall be elected by a direct vote of the people. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, unless the chairman of the committee changes his mind, I will not offer this amendment and ask for a vote upon it; but it is time to think about these things.

Revolution can nearly always be prevented if we will only yield to proper public sentiment, even in a conservative way. If you think that this kind of sentiment is going backward, you are mistaken. It is coming. Call it populistic or what you please, the doctrine of initiative, referendum, and recall is coming, and it is coming to stay. It is going to be a part of the national, State, and municipal legislation of this country; if not in the form now demanded, then in some way by which the same result will be reached.

The Constitution did not provide for direct election of the President of the United States, but we have it. It has been amended by the action of the people in the method of selecting party nominees and party candidates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SULZER). The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG] prepared to use some of his time now?

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think five minutes are quite as much time as I desire in which to discuss this House joint resolution. Heretofore I have voted for a resolution in some respects similar to this—two and perhaps three times. I am inclined to the opinion that the people voting directly for Senators would give as good results as are obtained when they are chosen by the legislatures under the provisions of the present Constitution, and perhaps better results. If I understand this joint resolution, however, I shall vote against it, for this reason: After providing the proposed amendment for the election of Senators by the people, it proceeds further and amends section 4 of Article I of the Constitution. That section now reads:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

As I understand it, the last clause in that section is stricken out.

Mr. MANN. So far as Senators are concerned.

Mr. CANNON. So far as Senators are concerned. I am not so sure but what it is also stricken out so far as Representatives are concerned. But let that be as it may, I will not vote for such an amendment, containing such a provision.

You take my house when you do take the prop
That doth sustain my house.

The Federal Government of the United States, a Government of limited power, but supreme where power is granted under the Constitution, should always have the power to perpetuate itself without regard to what any State or any States may do in failing to perform their duty.

Let me put an extreme case, and what may happen in the future I do not know. Suppose a State secedes; suppose the man comes on horseback and tries to take the State out of the Union, and the State does secede in fact without regard to what might be the desire of the majority of the people. Is the United States powerless under the proposed amendment in that case to say that a Senator can not be chosen by an election authorized by Congress?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. If so, then the Government of the United States, so far as Congress is concerned, exists at the mercy of the States in the exercise of supreme power where supreme power is granted. I say again that I think this amendment applies to the House as well as to the Senate, but the Senate is a coordinate branch of Congress, and Congress can not exist under our Constitution without a Senate. Mr. Speaker, I will not vote for such a resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, it would be manifestly impossible for me to enter upon any extended discussion as to the merits of this resolution in the short space of five minutes allotted to me; but this question is not a new one; it has been discussed time and again, ever since and before the adoption of the Federal Constitution. It therefore needs no great amount of time now for any gentleman to make up his mind how he should vote on the proposition. For myself, I have long been in favor of the direct election of United States Senators by the people themselves. I am on record in favor of that proposition. More than 30 years ago, in 1879, in the Legislature of the State of Illinois, I introduced a resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from that State to support a proposed constitutional amendment providing for the direct election of Senators by the people. I have more than once introduced such a resolution in this House, and at the time I was first nominated for Congress I announced that as one of the planks in my platform and as a measure which I should advocate at every opportunity. I believe in the people and am willing to trust them at all times. I believe the people are and of right ought to be supreme in this Government, and that when they have fully studied and digested any question they are almost universally right. I know, and every man in this House and in this Congress knows, without any shadow of doubt whatever, that the great mass of the people of the United States are desirous of having adopted an amendment to the Federal Constitution that shall give them the right to say directly who their representatives in the Senate of the United States shall be. As a member of the Illinois General Assembly and State Senate it has been my fortune to have participated in six different elections for United States Senator, and at each time I have become more and more convinced that the election should rest with the people and not with the legislature. At one time in the legislature of that State, the two political parties being a tie, we balloted for more than four long months before a Senator was elected, and then his election was made possible by the fact that a member belonging to one party died and was succeeded by a member of the other party, thereby giving that party a majority. Of course, such a condition of affairs is not desirable, and could not by any possibility occur if the election was directly in the hands of the people.

At another senatorial election in which I participated, where two or three men held the balance of power, they were able to dictate the election of a Senator, and after a deadlock lasting several weeks the will of the majority was trampled under foot and these two or three independent members were able to dictate the election of a United States Senator, although they represented only the smallest kind of a minority of the people of that State. True or false, justly or unjustly, Mr. Speaker, the people of this country, or the great majority of them, have come to believe that it has occurred in not only one case, but in many cases, that great interests, great financial institutions combined, have dictated and corruptly controlled the election of United States Senators by the legislatures of more than one State. The people are now asking and demanding, regardless of party, all over this country that they shall have the right to say by direct vote who shall represent them in the Senate of the United States. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is our duty to give them that privilege, if it is their right; and if this country is to continue to be "the land of the free and the home of the brave," if it is to continue to be a government "of and by and for the people," if it is to continue to be the foremost leader in the civilization and progress of the world, we must see to it that in reality, as well as in theory, the people are supreme; that their wishes must be heeded, and public servants in the Senate and in all departments of the Government must be responsive to the will of the people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I consider it a great privilege to appear as an advocate of this bill on the floor of this House following the distinguished ex-Speaker, Mr. CANNON, who has just taken his seat. I consider it a great honor to appear on the floor of this House to speak on the first bill reported to the House; I consider it a great honor to be on the committee that reported the first bill to a Democratic House in 16 years; but, sir, I consider it a still greater honor to stand on the floor, representing the people of the old red hills of the eighth congressional district of Georgia, delivering their message of almost unanimous demand that the United States Senators be elected by the people and calling on you to heed their demand.

Mr. Speaker, I would not rise to speak to-day, being a new Member of the House, except for the fact that an error has crept into this discussion in regard to the action of the committee. Being a member of that committee, I am familiar with what occurred in the committee room. I would correct the statement that only one of the minority side of the House was present, because there were two present who cast their votes, as the record will show, in the committee room. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee went to the telephone and tried to secure all the members of this committee, and did all in his power to secure full attendance, and it was the sense of the committee, after he had laid the matter before them, that we proceed at once, by reason of the fact that everybody throughout the Union is familiar with this bill, it having been oftentimes introduced in almost the same language in which it is here to-day and discussed in this House. Therefore I can see no reason why anybody could raise complaint of hasty action.

It seems to me that recent performances of the different legislatures in many States of the Union should convince any man that we have reached the stage in our national history when we should no longer allow legislatures to elect United States Senators. It is a well-known fact, although it is denied, that the interests, corporate interests, enter the floor of the house of the different legislatures frequently; that they influence the election of Senators. When men are elected to office it makes no difference whether they are Senators or ordinaries, or what position they occupy, when they get into office and come to discharge their duties they are naturally influenced by and sympathize with the people and the interests who elect them.

When you go to the farms and seek a vote for United States Senator, or for any other office, you find an unprejudiced voter generally. Most of the people are interested only in good government, and when they walk up and cast their votes they cast them for the man they think will represent the mass of the people and the interests of the people, and not the interests of a corporation or any other interest that may have secured his election on the floor of the legislature. As I said, I know it is denied that the interests and the corporations enter upon the floor of the houses of the legislatures of the different States, but there is no use to deny the truth. I can remember when I was a boy of hearing it charged in the State of Georgia, my own State, that good old pious State, that the general assembly in the eighties was tied up for weeks and months, and I can remember that it was asserted then that certain corporate interests tied up that legislature. That was denied, of course. One of the men who then participated and undertook to go to the Senate against whom the charge was made that he had entered the floor of the house with his corporate interests and corruption fund backing him, afterwards moved to the State of California, and it was charged in recent years that he brought together the greatest corruption fund that was ever put up in the interest of legislation in this Union. Whether or not that is true I do not know; but these things were brought into the courts and criminal charges were made against him and he was tried. This history is well known of all men. [Applause.]

Sir, it was my privilege to introduce on the first day a similar bill to the one under consideration, which when enacted into law would read as follows:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, who shall be chosen by a direct vote of the people of the several States, for six years, and the electors of each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, and each Senator shall have one vote.

When vacancies occur in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the executive authority thereof shall make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election, as the legislature may direct.

This amendment has no application to Senators chosen before it becomes valid as a part of the Constitution of the United States, and shall not be considered to affect the term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as a part of the Constitution.

The legislature in each State shall prescribe the manner, place, and time of holding the election by the people for Senator in the several States.

This bill is in substance the same as the one now under consideration, and I cheerfully adopt the chairman's bill. The people of this Union have demanded this legislation for a time the memory of we young men runneth not. It is no new question. It has been strengthened in the public demand by years of thought, sober and earnest deliberation. Resolutions by the legislatures favoring this bill have been sent here by 31 States. Extra sessions of the legislatures are often called in States to transact the State's business, the time of the regular session having been consumed by senatorial scrambles, and often the whole State is humiliated and demoralized by scenes in legislative halls. The strongest argument used against the bill is reluctance to change the framework of our Government. Our fathers in making the framework of the Government were confronted with the European forms of government and long precedents of centralized power. It was considered dangerous to load the new Republic with too many experiments, and there were many advocates of a monarchy.

The evolution of free government by the people demanded many changes from the old landmarks of the mother country. All men in those days were not prepared for a government by the people. Strong minds like Hamilton were battling for centralized government and feared the voice of the people expressed at the polls. Suffrage was almost unknown. Not one man in five hundred voted in the mother country. Time has proven that the people can be more surely trusted with the elective franchise than legislative bodies with the various interests camping on the floors of the Capitol. No one would charge corruption to legislative bodies as a whole. The report expresses clearly the thought I would here convey, it reads as follows:

No one contends for a moment that it is the universal practice or the general rule that legislatures are thus corrupted, but it must be admitted by all that if those who desire to corrupt enter the field at all, it is after the legislature has convened.

How often is it true that no taint of wrongdoing or corruption attaches to the election until the legislature has convened? The small number of parties to be controlled, the possibility of logrolling with different local interests, of trading this or that for votes, is tempting indeed to those who seek a senatorship, not upon merit, but through sinister means. In the early days of the Republic very few of the important offices, National or State, were filled by direct vote of the people. The President was named by an electoral college. Jefferson was elected both governor and Member of Congress by the State Legislature of Virginia. Many statehouse officers and all judicial officers were elected in the various States by the legislature. This era of our history is now relegated to the past, and almost the last remnant for legislative lobbying is the election of United States Senators. All officers are elected by direct vote of the people in all the States with a very few exceptions. The rule of the people, as exemplified in this Republic, has swept across the ocean; monarchies have crumbled before the demand of the people for freedom and suffrage, and even in countries where the throne was law the voice of the people is now heard in the land. Have gentlemen contemplated the fact that this office is oftentimes no longer a reward to men of true worth, true patriotism, and great ability? How many Senators come to this Senate on account of the influence exerted by their wealth and the wealth of their associates—the giant corporations? Our forefathers did not confront this situation. We will act wise to grapple the situation that confronts us, they could not foresee our present needs. They did well for their country, what will we do? So, sir, I say, let every man, I do not care if he uses his pick and shovel to make his daily bread, be as free to cast his vote as the president of a steel trust in the election of the highest official of his State. We can no longer turn a deaf ear to the demands of the people.

The Democratic side of this House would do well to learn a lesson by the vacant seats on the Republican side. The Republicans have been warned time after time on the floor of this House that they were straying too far from the people. To this and other warnings they have paid no heed, and now, sir, I call you to witness how their ranks have been thinned and that many new Democrats are here from districts that have never sent Democratic Representatives here before. You can not ignore the just demands of the people. Fellow Democrats, the country will commend us in the organization of this House for heeding the general demand for retrenchment and reform in Government extravagance. The official force of the House was reduced to the extent in money total the sum of $186,000. On the question of extravagance the people have appealed to this House, just as they have long been knocking at this door for the election of Senators by the people. What relief has the Republican Party offered to a tax-burdened people? Only 10 years have expired since the billion-dollar Congress was ushered upon the people. The country was stirred with indignation and alarm at such an enormous expenditure. In 1910 Congress appropriated $2,206,774,016.01. This shows an increase of more than 50 per cent in 10 years. The increase since 1896 has been over 75 per cent. In this estimate the increased population is considered. The per capita tax in 1890 was about $6, and it is now over $12. It is estimated that there is one Government employee for every 21 voters. In the year 1850 the expense of the Government was $60,407,019; population was 23,191,876; per capita, $2.60. In 1910, expense of one year, $1,103,387,508.01; population, 91,972,267; and per capita tax, $12.60. The comparison staggers comprehension. I realize the fact that it takes an enormous amount of money to run the Government, and I am willing to appropriate the people's money if it serves the great mass of people. As an illustration of what is being appropriated. I refer you to the appropriation for Government detectives. In the Sixtieth Congress the gigantic sum of $7,126,000 was appropriated for this purpose alone. Forestry is a question of no great magnitude, and yet $4,000,000 was appropriated for forestry at last session. Such appropriations are conducive of little good. On the other hand, farming is and has ever been the backbone of this country, and yet the appropriation for agriculture in all the departments is only five million more than these two appropriations of spoil and plunder. The Republican Party was warned, even at the other end of the Capitol last year, and even by that great apostle of high tariff, Senator Aldrich, that the people would not always strive with the Republicans for economy. He said the Government could be run on a saving of $300,000,000 every year. Taking this estimate as true, you are wasting more of the people's money than was required to run the Government 10 years after the Civil War.

For a decade the Republican Party has been under the lash of a few multimillionaires, arrayed like Solomon in all his glory, who toil not and neither do they spin, but have their toilers and spinners in the Republican Party. In serving that master the party has ignored the people. Now, sir, I warn the Democratic side of this House that the people have spoken at the polls and said, by leaving Republicans at home, that their demands shall be heard, and we must heed their demand by speedily passing this bill.

FEDERAL CONTROL.

The amendment looking to placing the election under Federal control is here for the purpose of frightening southern Representatives in States having legislative qualifications for electors. In this you propose to extend Federal authority, thus crushing forever the constitutional right the States have enjoyed from the foundation of the Government. We passed through the Civil War, the days of reconstruction, with no authority in the Federal Constitution to interfere with the manner of electing United States Senators, and yet in this day of peace and harmony you undertake to force upon the people of the South a new constitutional provision whereby Federal soldiers can be sent to camp around our election precincts. To make myself clear, the people elect members of the legislature with no Federal interference and none is provided under the provisions of the Constitution. These legislators so elected elect Senators with no Federal interference and none is provided. Now, you propose to extend the provisions of the Constitution and throw around the elections of Senators Federal control. You are seeking to take from the States their constitutional right and centralize the power of the Federal Government. The Supreme Court has decided that the States can determine who should be registered and who should not be registered in the several States. This is a settled constitutional question. What man among you ever expects to see the day when Federal office-holders gather around election precincts in the South or any other State to say who shall and who shall not vote? Time after time the force bill has been here threatening the South, but long years ago it was driven from this House disfigured, disgraced, disowned, and denounced as infamous; no one to rise up and call its author blessed. Thus it sleeps in the potter's field a peaceful desertion. Is there a man in this House that desires to see the days of reconstruction repeated in the South? No; not one. No part of this Union outranks the South on the floor of this House, evidenced by the fact that you have given us an equal share of the honors and responsibilities in the Sixty-second Congress. Will the opening of our wounds never cease to be an agreeable performance to some of the Republicans from the other side of the House? From wrecks of fortunes and burning homes we have fought and regained our former prestige, and to-day the South is the garden spot of this Union. I can not believe any man in this House is sincere in pressing this amendment.

The day has been when such an amendment would have received strong and aggressive support, but that day is gone forever in this end of the Capitol, thank God. You men who injected this sectional issue in this question will feel the sting of repudiation when this vote is counted. This House has long since ceased to be a forum for an exhibition of skill in trampling upon the South. I warn you that instead of stirring up bitterness and hate in the hearts of your brethren from North, East, and West you have insulted their intelligence and brought down upon your own heads their just condemnation. If you be men, then rise up like patriots and strike down this amendment, which would destroy rights of a State and again carry back to the days of reconstruction our peaceful southern homes. Let us dwell together in union, forgetting that there is a North, South, East, or West, sympathizing with each other in the problems that confront us in the several sections.

We of the South have patiently and faithfully borne the burden of an inferior race; that we have borne it well is known throughout the civilized world. Other sections are being confronted with serious problems. To solve them you need our help and you will have it. No section can truthfully boast of more genuine loyalty to our Government or more pride in her achievements. Standing here on this floor, the home of the Union, where Hamilton and Jefferson, Webster and Calhoun, Stevens and Lincoln stood battling for what each honestly conceived to be a common heritage of freedom, I thank God the day has come when men who rise to the magnitude of statesmanship, even on the Republican side, despise any effort to gain public notice by attempting to inject sectional animosities into any question in this House. Sir, let us strike down the staff that waves this sectional banner, and let us banish even its shades forever from this House and bar eternally the doors to future reproach on the honor and integrity of the South. The defeat of the amendment to this joint resolution will send a thrill of joy to every southern home and return southern Representatives to their people to be greeted, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." [Applause and congratulations.]

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in his speech a moment ago stated that he was not so certain but what this amendment repealed the right now existing in the Congress of the United States to regulate the elections of Representatives in Congress. I submit that the gentleman had not read with much care the amendment, or he could not have made that statement with a very great deal of confidence, because the amendment reads as follows:

> And in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

Not so far as it relates to the election of Members of the House of Representatives, but refers only to "Senators." This amendment in no way affects whatever authority or right Congress has to regulate that, and how the gentleman from Illinois could predicate his opposition upon the theory that it did affect the power of Congress to regulate the election of Members of this House is not very apparent to me, nor, I do believe, to any one who will examine it with care.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. The part of the resolution which the gentleman has read would form no part of the Constitution, would it, if this resolution should be adopted and the amendment adopted by the people?

Mr. JAMES. Oh, but that part of the amendment which I will read does control it, and that is this:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.

Does the gentleman see anything in that which affects the right which Congress now has to control the election of Representatives in Congress, if it has any such right? There is no part of this amendment which refers in any way to Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Ah, but it is said that is in lieu of certain provisions in the Constitution.

Mr. JAMES. But it nowhere uses any language that according to a fair construction of it would be a foundation for a statement that this amendment undertakes to affect in any way the election of Representatives of this House.

I am for this amendment to the Constitution, and I regret to see in this House an effort made to try to bring up that old scare that has too long affected the affairs of political parties of this country. Let me warn you gentlemen of the other side of one thing. The southern people are handling now the subject of election of Senators and Members of Congress to the satisfaction of this House and to the approval of you yourselves, because you have never unseated a single Member by reason of the laws under which he was elected. The Supreme Court of the United States has approved the election laws under which they are now acting, and to try to place upon this amendment a provision that would mean its defeat—because it was placed upon it in the Senate and it meant its defeat there—almost forces me to question the good faith of those who propose it and to believe that the amendment is offered for no other purpose except to try to defeat the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people. [Applause.]

I am in favor of the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people because experience has proved its wisdom. In the days when our Constitution was formed Gouverneur Morris was the spokesman of those who doubted the wisdom of the people to control themselves. Gouverneur Morris used this language, that the Senate should be made up of men of "great and established wealth," and that thus they might keep down the "turbulency of the democracy."

Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to deny but that what Gouverneur Morris wished to do has been accomplished. The Senate has been made up of men of great and established wealth, but the rules of this House deny me the right to discuss its personnel, and I shall not violate them. But the one reason that spurs the people on in their advocacy of this amendment for the direct election of Senators by the people is to keep out of the Senate men of great and established wealth and allow the voice of the people to control and the reforms desired by them to be enacted into law.

I am one of those who do not fear the people. Gentlemen, the men who bear the guns that defend this Republic must bear the ballots that preserve it. [Applause.] I do not belong to that class in this country which says to the great populace, "You can shed your blood to keep the flag of the Republic in the skies, but you can not name the men who make the laws for you." [Applause.] I share the opinion expressed by the master mind of Thomas Jefferson when he uttered these words:

> I would rather be exposed to the inconveniences attending too much liberty than those attending too slight a degree of it.

This is the ground rock upon which republics rest, and when maintained can not be shaken.

Mr. Speaker, some people seem to believe the Constitution of the United States should not be amended, and was not made to be amended; but in this they are grievously in error. One of the greatest speeches ever made in the Constitutional Convention was that one uttered by Patrick Henry in opposition to the Constitution, based upon the theory that it was too hard to amend and that it would be practically impossible to do so. And for more than a hundred years of our history the Constitution has not been amended except by the sword. But the men who made the Constitution themselves gave the people two modes by which they might amend it. They made it hard, exceeding hard, to amend it. For the day in which they lived it met every requirement, but they could not peer through the centuries of the future and see the requirements that advanced civilization would make necessary. Thomas Jefferson himself used these words:

Some men look at constitutions with sanctimonious reverence, and deem them like the ark of the covenant, too sacred to be touched. They ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom more than human, and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. I knew that age well. I belonged to it and labored with it. It deserved well of its country. It was very like the present, but lacked the experience of the present—and 40 years of experience in government is worth a century of book reading—and this they would say themselves were they to rise from the dead. I am certainly not an advocate of frequent and untried changes in laws and constitutions. I think moderate imperfections had better be borne with, because when once known we accommodate ourselves to them and find practical means of correcting they evil effects. But I know also that laws and institutions must go hand and hand with the progress of the human mind. * * * We might as well require a man to wear the coat that fitted him when a boy as civilized society to remain ever under the régime of their ancestors. It is this preposterous idea which has lately deluged Europe in blood. Their monarchs, instead of wisely yielding to the gradual change of circumstances, of favoring progressive accommodation to progressive improvement, have clung to old abuses, entrenched themselves behind steady habits, and obliged their subjects to seek through blood and violence rash and ruinous innovations, which, had they been referred to the peaceful deliberations and collected wisdom of the nation, would have been put into acceptable and salutary forms. Let us follow no such examples, nor weakly believe that one generation is not as capable as another of taking care of itself and of ordering its own affairs. * * * Each generation is as independent of the one preceding as that was of all that had gone before. It has, like them, the right to choose for itself the form of government it believes most promotive of its own happiness; consequently, to accommodate to the circumstances in which it finds itself that received from its predecessors; and it is for the peace and good of mankind that a solemn opportunity of doing this every 19 or 20 years should be provided by the Constitution, so that it may be handed on with periodical repairs from generation to the end of time, if anything human can so long endure.

These words are prophetic; they are almost inspired. They come from the one unmatched champion of the liberty of men, who battled in the twilight of the Republic's existence for the greatest liberty to the people. He has been vindicated by the events that have followed as no statesman who lived before him and, as I believe, by none who will come after him. No one doubts, Mr. Speaker, that if the honest, patriotic men who made the Constitution could have looked down the long vista that has followed them that they would have provided for the election of Senators by the State legislatures. No millionaires lived in that heroic age, no trusts, monopolies, and lawless combinations banded themselves together with bags of gold to control one of the lawmaking branches of this Republic. Bribery and corruption of members of the legislature had not been heard of. It was the purest and best age of our American life. But even then Jefferson thought, and Wilson, of Pennsylvania, thought, that the Members of the Senate should be elected by the direct vote of the people. This amendment, that gives to the people the right to elect their Senators by a direct vote, will make unnecessary, after its adoption, costly investigating committees, holding long-drawn-out sessions at great governmental expense, investigating how many members of the legislature were bribed, or whether a man really confessed he was bribed when he was not. They will no longer have to investigate how great a corruption fund was collected by the trusts and monopolies to control and buy up members of the legislature.
